SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1956

No. 582

SAMUEL ROTH, PETITIONER,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

INDEX

JUDD & DETWEILER (INC.), PRINTERS, WASHINGTON, D. C., FEB. 18, 1957

—3935-4

[fol. 1]

IN UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellee

v.

SAMUEL ROTH, Appellant

STATEMENT PURSUANT TO RULE 15(b)

This proceeding was instituted by the filing of a twenty-six count indictment on July 20, 1955. The defendant-appellant pleaded not guilty on July 25, 1955. Trial by jury commenced on January 3, 1956 before the Honorable John M. Cashin, and was concluded on January 12, 1956. Counts 12, 25 and 26 were dismissed during trial. The jury found the defendant-appellant guilty of Counts 10, 13, 17 and 24 and acquitted him of the remaining counts. The judgment of the Court, sentencing the defendant-appellant to concurrent five year terms of imprisonment on each of the four counts, and a fine of $5,000 on Count 10, and fines of $1 each on Counts 13, 17 and 24 which last fines were remitted, was entered on February 7, 1956. Notice of appeal was filed on February 7, 1956.

[fol. 2] IN UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

JUDGMENT AND COMMITMENT—February 7, 1956

On this 7th day of February, 1956 came the attorney for the government and the defendant appeared in person and by counsel

IT IS ADJUDGED that the defendant has been convicted upon his plea of not guilty and a verdict of guilty by a Jury of the offense of unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters, to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices and a book entitled "American Aphrodite" which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character

T 18 Sec. 2 and 1461 USC as charged in counts 10-13-17-24 and the court having asked the defendant whether he has anything to say why judgment should not be pronounced, and no sufficient cause to the contrary being shown or appearing to the Court,

It Is Adjudged that the defendant is guilty as charged and convicted.

It Is Adjudged that the defendant is hereby committed to the custody of the Attorney General or his authorized representative for imprisonment for a period of Count Ten—Five Years and fined $5000. Defendant to stand committed until fine is paid or he is otherwise discharged according to law.

[fol. 3] Count Thirteen—Five Years and fined $1.00. Fine Remitted.

Count Seventeen—Five Years and fined $1.00. Fine Remitted.

Count Twenty-four—Five Years and fined $1.00. Fine Remitted.

Prison sentence on each of counts 10-13-17-24 to run concurrently with each other.

Motion for Bail pending Appeal is denied.

It is ordered that the Clerk deliver a certified copy of this judgment and commitment to the United States Marshal or other qualified officer and that the copy serve as the commitment of the defendant.

(S.) John M. Cashin, United States District Judge.

[fol. 4] In United States District Court, Southern District of New York

Indictment—Filed July 20, 1955

The Grand Jury charges:

1. On or about the 15th day of February, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters, to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

James Feldhouse
6171 Stanbury
Parma 29, Ohio

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom, and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including, among other articles and things:

Wallet Nudes
French Nudes at Play
Stereoptic Nude Show
2 Undraped Stars.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 5] Count II

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 18th day of February, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Bill B. Klovkski
4498 W. Point
Dearborn, Michigan

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

Wallet Nudes
French Nudes at Play
Stereoptic Nude Show
2 Undraped Stars.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 6] Count III

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 16th day of March, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Brooks Dyer
3821 Regal Place
St. Louis 9, Mo.

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

Wallet Nudes
French Nudes at Play
Stereoptic Nude Show
2 Undraped Stars.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 7] Count IV

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 16th day of February, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Mr. R. L. Bissler
118 S. Haines
Alliance, Ohio

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

Wallet Nudes
French Nudes at Play
Stereoptic Nude Show
2 Undraped Stars.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 8] Count V

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 25th day of May, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Brooks Dyer
3821 Regal Place
St. Louis 9, Mo.

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

Good Times,
Chicago Sex-Dimensional Issue.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 9] Count VI

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 26th day of May, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Uhlich Children's Home
3737 N. Mozart
Chicago, Ill.

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

Good Times,
Chicago Sex-Dimensional Issue.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 10] Count VII

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 28th day of June, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Charles Buerger
5424 Northumberland St.
Pittsburgh 17, Pa.

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

Good Times,
Chicago Sex-Dimensional Issue
NUS.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 11] Count VIII

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 28th day of April, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Mr. Richard G. Kahn
33 N. LaSalle
Chicago, Ill.

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

Good Times,
Chicago Sex-Dimensional Issue.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 12] Count IX

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 24th day of May, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures, and notices addressed to:

North West Registry for Nurses
3903 N. Kildar St.
Chicago, Ill.

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

Good Times,
Chicago Sex-Dimensional Issue.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 13] Count X

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 10th day of December, 1954, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Mr. Paul Masadowski
76-39 171 St.
Flushing 66, N. Y.

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

Photo and Body
Good Times, Vol. 1 No. 10.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 14] Count XI

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 3rd day of January, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Duane Elliott
17 Pratt Ave.
Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

Photo and Body
Good Times, Vol. 1 No. 10.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 15] Count XII

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 24th day of December, 1954, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Gloria Jean Paulo
Fairground Blvd. R.D. 2
Canfield, Ohio

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

Photo and Body
Good Times, Vol. 1 No. 10.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 16] Count XIII

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or abount the 9th day of November, 1954, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Robert Mateinore
21 Edgewater Dr.
Old Greenwich, Conn.

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

Good Times, Vol. 1 No. 8.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 17] Count XIV

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 18th day of April, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant, herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Mr. J. Chapman
17 Hilltop Place
Staten Island 8, New York

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

NUS
Good Times, Vol. 2 No. 14.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 18] Count XV

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 15th day of April, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Mrs. E. W. McCreery
1569 Golf View Road
Ardmore, Penna.

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

NUS
Good Times, Vol. 2, No. 14.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 19] Count XVI

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 20th day of July, 1953, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Mrs. Geo. K. Livermore
30 E. 72nd Street
New York 21, New York

which matters were nonmailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and in that they gave information directly and indirectly where, how, from whom and by what means other matters, articles and things of an obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and indecent character might be obtained, including among other articles and things:

American Aphrodite, Number 3.

2. The aforesaid nonmailable matters, articles and things are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 20] Count XVII

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 19th day of February, 1954, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters, to wit, printed circulars, letters, advertisements, writings, pictures and notices addressed to:

Archie Lovejoy
RR 5
Cordele, Georgia

which matters were non-mailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character, and which matters are further described as having advertised, among other things, "American Aphrodite Number Thirteen" and "Good Times, Vol. 1 No. 5".

2. The aforesaid non-mailable matters are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

Count XVIII

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 21st day of March, 1955 at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain [fol. 21] matters, to wit, "Stereoptice Nude Show" and "Wallet Nudes", addressed to:

Bernard Skriloff
1055 University Ave.
Bronx 52, N. Y.

which matters were non-mailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character.

2. The aforesaid non-mailable matters are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

Count XIX

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 18th day of March, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matter, to wit, a book of Photographs, entitled "NUS", addressed to:

Bernard Skriloff
1055 University Ave.
Bronx 52, N. Y.

which matter was non-mailable in that it was obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character.

2. The aforesaid non-mailable matter is of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further de- [fol. 22] scription thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

Count XX

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 14th day of April, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters, to wit, eight magazines entitled "Good Times", described further as Vol. 1 No. 7, Vol. 1 No. 8, Vol. 1 No. 9, Vol. 1, No. 10, Vol. 1, No. 11, Vol. 1, No. 12, Vol. 2, No. 13, and Vol 2 No. 14, addressed to:

George Blair
Box 528
Dover, N. J.

which matters were non-mailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character.

2. The aforesaid non-mailable matters are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 1 and 1461.)

[fol. 23] Count XXI

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 30th day of June, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters, to wit, a quantity of magazines entitled "Good Times", described further as Vol. 2 No. 15, addressed to:

King's News
250 E. Fifth St.
Cincinnati, Ohio

which matters were non-mailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character.

2. The aforesaid non-mailable matters are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

Count XXII

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 10th day of June, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters, to wit, a quantity of magazines entitled "Good Times", described further as Vol. 2 No. 14, addressed to:

[fol. 24] Bell Block News Store
606 Vine St.
Cincinnati, Ohio

which matters were non-mailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character.

2. The aforesaid non-mailable matters are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

Count XXIII

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. In or about April, 1955, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matters, to wit, "Stereoptic Nude Show", "Wallet Nudes", and "2 Undraped Stars", addressed to:

F. C. Weatherdon Jr.
6, Barnes Rd.
St. Johns, Newfoundland
Canada

which matters were non-mailable in that they were obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character.

2. The aforesaid non-mailable matters are of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

[fol. 25] Count XXIV

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 10th day of March, 1953, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matter, to wit, a book entitled "American Aphrodite", described further as Vol. 1 No. 3, addressed to:

Archie Lovejoy
R.R. #5
Cordele, Ga.

which matter was non-mailable in that it was obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character.

2. The aforesaid non-mailable matter is of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

Count XXV

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. On or about the 29th day of December, 1954, at the Southern District of New York, Samuel Roth, the defendand herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery certain matter, to wit, a book of photographs entitled "Photo and Body No. 4", addressed to:

[fol. 26] Whispering Pines TRCT
Rte. 5
Aiken, South Carolina

which matter was non-mailable in that it was obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character.

2. The aforesaid non-mailable matter is of such vile, obscene, lewd and lascivious character that a further description thereof would defile the records of this Court, and therefore such further description is not set forth in this indictment.

(Title 18, United States Code, Sections 2 and 1461.)

Count XXVI

The Grand Jury further charges:

1. That from in or about March, 1951, and continuously thereafter up to and including the date of the filing of this indictment, in the Southern District of New York and elsewhere, Samuel Roth, the defendant herein, unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly did combine, conspire, confederate and agree with Chief Miller, G. I. Distributors, Inc., Morris Sorkin, Philip S. Foner, Remainder Book Company, Abraham Lieberman, Book Sales, Inc., and divers other persons to the Grand Jury unknown, to commit offenses against the United States in violation of Title 18, United States Code, Section 1461.

2. It was part of said conspiracy that said defendant and co-conspirators would publish, print, distribute, deposit and cause to be deposited for mailing and delivery obscene, lewd, lascivious and filthy books, pamphlets, pictures, papers, letters, writings, prints, packets, packages, articles and other publications and things of an indecent character.

[fol. 27] Overt Acts

In pursuance of said conspiracy and to effect the objects thereof, in the Southern District of New York:

1. On or about the 3rd day of April, 1953, defendant Samuel Roth and co-conspirator Chief Miller affixed their signatures to a document commencing with the words "Agreement between Chief Miller, acting for G. I. Distributors, Inc., and Samuel Roth, acting for Seven Sirens Press Inc., for the distribution of a monthly magazine entitled "Good Times: A Review of the World of Pleasure".

2. On or about the 10th day of June, 1955, co-conspirator Book Sales, Inc. deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery a package addressed to:

Bell Block News Store
606 Vine St.
Cincinnati, Ohio.

3. On or about the 18th day of April, 1955, co-conspirator Remainder Book Company deposited and caused to be deposited for mailing and delivery a package addressed to:

Clinton Bookshop
138 S. Clinton
Rochester, N. Y.

4. On or about the 9th day of May, 1955, co-conspirator G. I. Distributors, Inc., deposited and caused to be deposited a package addressed to:

King's News,
250 E. Fifth St.,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

(Title 18, United States Code, Section 371.)

—— ——, Foreman. Lloyd F. MacMahon, United States Attorney.

[fol. 28] In United States District Court

Charge of the Court

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury: The time has now arrived in this case when it becomes my duty to charge you as members of this jury and to give you the law in reference to this particular case, and then you apply that law to the facts as you find them from the testimony of witnesses and from the exhibits.

The United States of America here charges the defendant, Samuel Roth, with twenty-three different violations of Section 1461 of the United States Code, Title 18, which in part defines as a crime the depositing or causing to be deposited for mailing obsence, lewd, lascivious or filthy matter. The defendant pleads not guilty to those charges. That plea is a denial by the defendant of each and every material allegation made against him by the United States of America.

A grand jury heretofore indicted the defendant for the crime here charged. This indictment is no proof of guilt. That is the law. The indictment is simply an accusation and proves nothing. It is a cardinal principle of our system of justice that every person accused of crime is presumed to be innocent until guilt is established by proof sufficient in law. That presumption protects the defendant here at every stage of this trial. That presumption follows this case as it now goes to you. That presumption may be repelled or overthrown only by your verdict. Thus, the United States of America, who are the complainants in this case, have the burden of proof. The defendant, as I have said, denies each and every material allegation the United States of America makes against him.

He may not be found guilty by you unless his guilt of each and every essential element of the crimes charged against him is established by the United States of America and by the character and quality of proof required by law. [fol. 29] It is our theory of trial by jury that a jury's verdict should represent a concurrence or agreement of the individual judgments of twelve reasonable persons. I do not suggest that any of you are to refuse to consider or discuss the opinions of his fellow jurors, but I do charge you that each of you individually must be convinced of the guilt of the defendant by legally satisfactory evidence before you can return a verdict of guilty against him. Such verdict must be unanimous.

In this case the United States of America charges Samuel Roth with twenty-three different crimes. The burden of establishing these crimes is, I repeat, upon the United States of America, and that burden the United States of America must sustain by the character, quality and degree of proof, which shall satisfy you of the guilt of this defendant beyond a reasonable doubt.

What do I mean by the words "reasonable doubt"? There are no plainer words than the words "reasonable doubt." The term defines itself. You may, however, be aided by the idea of what a reasonable doubt is not. A reasonable doubt is not a mere possible doubt; not a vague nor fanciful doubt. In this case a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt of the crime charged by the United States of America is such a doubt thereof as a rational man or woman would consider well-founded after full and fair deliberation upon all the credible and trustworthy evidence in the case, or, as has been stated, a doubt for which a reason can be given. Such a doubt in this case entitles the defendant to a verdict of not guilty.

In consequence, the law is such that in a criminal case it is enough if proved that the defendant's guilt be established beyond a reasonable doubt, not beyond all possible doubt.

[fol. 30] You are the exclusive, the sole judges of the questions of fact in this case, and those questions of fact must be decided by you upon your own responsibility and by you alone. You are bound, nevertheless, to receive as law what is laid down as such by the Court. You are instructed of course that a defendant is not obligated to prove that he is innocent of the charges made against him. On the contrary, the burden of proving his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt is upon the Government and remains with the Government throughout the trial. If the Government has failed to satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty, you must acquit such defendant.

The burden of proving guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, as I have explained to you, applies to each and every essential element which is part of the offense charged, and which elements I shall call your attention to shortly. The failure of any defendant to take the witness stand to testify in his own behalf does not create any presumption against him, and you must not permit that fact to weigh in the slightest degree against him, nor should this fact enter into your deliberations or discussions in any manner.

It is important in a government such as ours that its laws be enforced, not only for the maintenance of the government, but also for the protection of each of us, in our security, property, safety and rights. On the other hand, there is no dearer right belonging to all of us than to be protected in our liberty if we have done nothing to curtail or to deserve, rather, the curtailment.

In your determination, therefore, you are not to be guided or governed in any way by passion, prejudice, public opinion or sympathy. Both the public and the defendant have the right to demand that you will carefully and dispassionately weigh and consider the evidence and the law of the case and give each your conscientious judgment.

[fol. 31] It is, as you know, only the testimony from the witness stand and the exhibits that constitute evidence, Statements of counsel or any statements contained in any questions asked of a witness by counsel are not evidence.

The indictment alleges that the defendant, Samuel Roth, knowingly deposited for mailing or caused to be deposited for mailing obscene, lewd, lascivious and filthy matter. In particular, the indictment charges the defendant in the first seventeen counts, excluding the twelfth, which has been withdrawn from your consideration, with mailing obscene circulars and advertising which are obscene, one, on their face, and, two, in that they give information where and how obscene matter may be obtained, to the sixteen different persons who testified here as receiving them.

In counts 18 to 24 the indictment charges the defendant with mailing certain obscene publications and pictures, which were advertised in one or more of those circulars. The publications were described as Stereoptic Nude Show and Wallet Nudes in count 18; a book of photographs entitled Nus in count 19; eight magazines entitled Good Times in count 20; a quantity of magazines entitled Good Times, Vol II, No. 15 in count 21; a quantity of magazines entitled Good Times, Vol. II, No. 14 in count 22; Stereoptic Nude Show, Wallet Nudes and 2 Undraped Stars in Count 23; the book American Aphrodite in count 24.

As I have already said, the crimes charged here are defined by the statute, Title 18, Section 1461 of the U. S. Code, which insofar as applicable herein provides as follows:

> "Every obscene, lewd, lascivious or filthy book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, writing, print or other publication of an indecent character, and every written or printed card, letter, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement or notice of any kind giving informa-> [fol. 32] tion directly or indirectly, where or how or from whom or by what means any such matters, articles or things may be obtainable, is declared to be non-mailable, and whoever knowingly deposits for mailing or delivery anything declared by this section to be non-mailable, is guilty of the offense."

The essential elements of the offense are, one, that the defendant knowingly deposited or caused to be deposited in the United States mails the offending printed matter or the advertising information as to where, when, how or from whom such matter could be obtained; and, two, that in fact that matter was obsence, lewd, lascivious or filthy.

Before you find the defendant guilty you must find beyond a reasonable doubt that the Government has established each essential element. If not, your verdict must be not guilty. Of course, if you do find that they have established all the essential elements of the crimes as charged, then of course your verdict must be guilty.

As to the first element, that is, the mailing, you should have little if any difficulty in reaching a conclusion. The defendant, through his counsel, has conceded the mailing or the causing to be mailed all the matter referred to in the various counts of the indictment. This concession is the equivalent of testimony of a witness and must be accepted by you with the same force and effect. However, you are still required to decide upon all the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the mailings by the defendant or under his direction, as charged in the indictment, did in fact occur, and as I have already said, there should be little difficulty in deciding this issue.

The real disputed issue is the second element of the offense—the nature and character of the circulars, book, pictures and publications. Who determines that issue?

[fol. 33] You, as members of the jury, are the sole and exclusive judges of the facts, and it is for you to decide, as you decide all questions of fact.

What is meant by "obscene, lewd, lascivious and filthy" and what standards do you apply in reaching a determination whether the pictures, circulars or book are of that character?

The words "obscene, lewd and lascivious" as used in the law, signify that form of immorality which has relation to sexual impurity and has a tendency to excite lustful thoughts. The matter must be calculated to corrupt and debauch the minds and morals of those into whose hands it may fall. It must tend to stir sexual impulses and lead to sexually impure thoughts. The test is not whether it would arouse sexual desires or sexual impure thoughts in those comprising a particular segment of the community, the young, the immature or the highly prudish or would leave another segment, the scientific or highly educated or the so-called worldly-wise and sophisticated indifferent and unmoved. "Filthy" as used here must also relate to sexual matters. It is distinguishable from the term "obsence," which tends to promote lust and impure thoughts. "Filthy" pertains to that sort of treatment of sexual matters in such a vulgar and indecent way, so that it tends to arouse a feeling of disgust and revulsion.

The test in each case is the effect of the book, picture or publication considered as a whole, not upon any particular class, but upon all those whom it is likely to reach. In other words, you determine its impact upon the average person in the community. The books, pictures and circulars must be judged as a whole, in their entire context, and you are not to consider detached or separate portions in reaching a conclusion. You judge the circulars, pictures and publications which have been put in evidence by [fol. 34] present-day standards of the community. You may ask yourselves does it offend the common conscience of the community by present-day standards.

The defendant here has called certain expert witnesses. Their testimony has been admitted for the purpose of showing you what the common conscience of the community is today. You are not bound by it. You are at liberty to accept or reject, in whole or in part, such testimony, accepting only that portion which commends itself to your judgment. These witnesses gave their opinions as to the impact this literature would have on the general public. Whether or not these pictures and publications are of such a character as to stir sexual impulses or arouse lustful passions or are revulsive or disgusting must be determined by you and you alone, according to the standards I have given you.

The testimony of an expert witness is treated no differently than that of any other witness. You weigh his or her interest in the case, possible bias or prejudice, manner of testifying, and in general evaluate the testimony in accordance with your good, sound common sense and what appeals to your reason.

The defendant also introduced in evidence certain books, bestsellers, and excerpts therefrom, as some evidence of the current reading habits of the public. I instruct you what weight if any you give to this evidence rests with you. I caution you you are not required to limit yourselves to a consideration of one or all of the books introduced by the defendant as examples of present-day standards of literary taste. You may consider and compare the number of people who read these books with the number of people who make up our community, and it may be your judgment that some or all of the books introduced by the defendant are obscene themselves, in accordance with the standard I have given you.

[fol. 35] In this case, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, you and you alone are the exclusive judges of what the common conscience of the community is, and in determining that conscience you are to consider the community as a whole, young and old, educated and uneducated, the religious and the irreligious—men, women and children.

Insofar as you are concerned, this indictment consists of twenty-three counts. You are not to concern yourselves with counts 12, 25 and 26, as they have been removed from your consideration. You are to consider each count separately, in accordance with the rules I have given you.

I repeat, in considering counts 1 to 17, excepting 12, which have to do with the circulars, you must consider whether they are obscene on their face; that is one, or, two, if they give information where and how obscene matter may be obtained. If you find that a circular was not obscene on its face, you must consider it in the light of those pictures and publications advertised in that particular circular, and which have been introduced in evidence before you. If you also find those pictures and publications not obscene, then your verdict must be not guilty on that particular count.

It follows, of course, if you were to find the defendant not guilty on all of the first seventeen counts, you would have to find him not guilty on the remaining counts.

I have sought to avoid any comments which might suggest my personal view as to conclusions to be drawn by you from the evidence. You are not to assume that I have any view as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant. The determination of that question is your sole and exclusive responsibility. If in the course of these instructions I have made reference to any evidence which does not accord with your recollection, you are to disregard that statement by me. It is your recollection of the evidence and not the state-[fol. 36] ments of the Court or the statements of counsel which govern. The actions of the Court during the trial in ruling upon motions or overruling objections or in sustaining objections are not to be taken by you as any indication of the guilt or innocence of the defendant. They are matters of procedure and of law, with which you, the jury, have no concern.

Also, as I previously instructed you during the course of this trial, you are to disregard any testimony I have stricken from the record, and it is not to be considered in your deliberations on the issues in this case.

Under your oaths as jurors, you cannot allow consideration of punishment which might be inflicted upon a convicted defendant to influence your verdict in any way or in any sense to enter into your deliberations. The duty of imposing sentence in the event of conviction rests exclusively upon the Court. Your function is solely to determine the guilt or innocence of the defendant upon the basis of the evidence.

If the Government has established the guilt of the defendant under the law beyond a reasonable doubt, as I have defined it to you, you should find him guilty. If the [fol. 37] Government has not so established his guilt, you should find him not guilty. It would be a great injustice to convict the defendant if there is a reasonable doubt of his guilt on the evidence under the law. It would be a mockery of justice to acquit him if his guilt has been established under the law beyond a reasonable doubt.

Any exceptions to the charge, Mr. Atlas?

Mr. Atlas: Well, my only exception, your Honor, is that you haven't charged certain of my requests in haec verba, but I think you have generally included them.

The Court: Well, except as charged, I am not passing upon any of the requests except as charged, and I will deny any further requests, except if you have any specific one that you request of me to charge.

Mr. Atlas: Your Honor has my sheet, but I think I can remember it.

I would like your Honor to charge that "coarse," in and of itself is not obscene.

The Court: I didn't get that.

Mr. Atlas: That the word "coarse," c-o-a-r-s-e, is not obscene.

The Court: I so charge.

Mr. Atlas: I will ask your Honor to charge that the nude in and of itself is not obscene.

The Court: I so charge.

I covered that in my main charge.

Mr. Atlas: I think my only objection is that it wasn't done in haec verba.

May I see that sheet?

The Court: Yes, you may.

Mr. Atlas: If you please.

And I ask your Honor to charge that the Court is not a censor.

The Court: Oh, I charge that.

Mr. Atlas: Yes, sir.

[fol. 38] The Court: It never sets itself up to be one.

Mr. Atlas: I don't mean your Honor. I mean the whole——

The Court: I thought you said the Court.

Mr. Atlas: The whole system, the whole Court is not a censor.

The Court: I so charge.

Mr. Atlas: I think, beyond that, your Honor has fairly covered everything, and I have no other exceptions.

The Court: Any requests from the Government?

Mr. Leisure: Nothing further, your Honor.

The Court: All right.

Now at this time I will discharge the two alternate jurors. You are discharged from any further participation in this case. The Court wants to extend to both of you its thanks for your careful attention that you have given, even though you were alternates, and I will request that you express no opinion about the case until after the jury returns with its verdict.

You are excused with the thanks of the Court.

(Alternates excused.)

The Court: Will you swear the officers, please?

(Marshals sworn.)

The Court: I think, if it is agreeable to counsel, in this particular case the indictment should go with the jury and also the exhibits, even if they don't request it.

Mr. Atlas: I won't have any objection if the clerk writes across the face of the counts that have been dismissed, "Dismissed".

The Court: Oh, yes. That is 12, 25 and 26.

Mr. Atlas: That's right, sir. I have no objection to them seeing all the exhibits and everything.

The Court: I am going to direct at this time—now you jurors are going to like what I am going to say—I am going to direct, before you start your deliberations, that the Gov- [fol. 39] ernment take you out and buy you lunch. Start your deliberations after lunch.

Is that all right? Is that satisfactory?

I thought that would be good.

They don't need to take these things with them now. When you come back, you can send in for a copy of the indictment and the exhibits, and by consent of counsel you can have them.

All right, the jury may retire.

(The jury retired at 12:30 P.M.)

The Court: This court will recess, awaiting the verdict of the jury.

Mr. Atlas: I trust that your Honor is continuing the defendant's bail during deliberations and so forth.

The Court: Of course.

Mr. Atlas: I am very grateful to you, sir.

The Court: Announce a recess of this court, pending a verdict of the jury, Mrs. Clerk.

(Recess.)

(At 2:50 P. M., the following took place in the robing room:)

The Court: The Court received a note from the jury, which reads as follows:

> "Chart relating the indictment numbers to the exhibit numbers."
>
> Signed "Edward Craig."

It appears that that chart was not introduced in evidence. However, have you any objection to the chart going to the jury, Mr. Leisure?

Mr. Leisure: No, I don't have at all.

The Court: Have you, Mr. Roth?

Mr. Roth: None at all.

The Court: Have you, Mr. Atlas?

[fol. 40] Mr. Atlas: No, sir.

The Court: All right. Then upon consent of both counsel and the defendant the Court will turn a copy of the chart over to the marshal for delivery to the jury.

Mr. Atlas: Thank you, Judge.

(The following took place at 6:07 P. M. in the robing room:)

The Court: I have another note from the jury, gentlemen. It says:

> "We need a clarification of your charge referring to counts 1 to 17 of the indictment as relating to the remainder of the counts.
>
> "Specifically, did you say if the defendant is 'Not Guilty' on counts 1 to 17, we must find him 'Not Guilty' on the remainder, and why?"

Mr. Leisure: May I make this request, your Honor, at this time? The charge as it was put was in a negative form, that is, "If you do not convict on the first seventeen, you cannot convict on the others." I think, in the Government's interest, I should request that you further charge that if they find that the exhibits are obscene, they must find that the circulars which advertised those exhibits are also obscene. I think that that would be a fair charge. It would be both negative and positive, and I think it would clarify it for them.

The Court: Do you have any objection to that, Mr. Atlas?

Mr. Atlas: I would like to think about it for a minute.

Well, if you do that, you would have to say that if they find that the exhibits, meaning the publications themselves, are not obscene, then the circulars are not obscene.

Mr. Leisure: That isn't necessarily so. The circular can be obscene on its face.

[fol. 41] Mr. Atlas: You have made that point, but I think——

Mr. Leisure: I think it is the law to say that if the exhibit, the publication, is obscene, that then any circular that advertises it is obscene. That certainly is not a misstatement of the law.

Mr. Atlas: That would be so, if the circular advertises it, but I think that it is probably a mistake to connect the two, Judge, because the question indicates that they are unable to reason about it the way the legal mind will reason about it.

Mr. Leisure: The question indicates that they don't understand it, and I think it is a fair thing to charge them both ways, and I think it would clarify it for them.

Mr. Atlas: Wouldn't it be simpler to say to them that if they find that the exhibits are not obscene, they then go back and find out whether the circulars are of themselves as publications obscene?

Mr. Leisure: I have no objection to that at all. The only thing is, I want the affirmative side charged too, and that is why I think it is a fair statement to say that if the exhibits are obscene, the publications are obscene, then any circular that advertises them is obscene, because the law is that any circular that advertises an obscene publication, even if it is just a typewritten page, is obscene.

Mr. Atlas: You are running into some difficulty there because the circulars which you are complaining of do not in every instance refer to American Aphrodite, No. 3. They may be referring to another issue of American Aphrodite. That is the first thing. And they do not necessarily advertise the issues of Good Times which are involved. That makes it very difficult.

Mr. Leisure: But it still is clear that if the exhibit is obscene, any circular that advertises it is obscene. That is perfectly clear.

Mr. Atlas: That is true, but then you have to tell them that the only issues of these magazines that are involved [fol. 42] are the issues of the exhibits, and that advertising another issue of the same magazine doesn't give them the privilege of saying the circular is obscene.

Mr. Leisure: That is the law. If they are going to have to split it, they will have to decide on it that way.

Mr. Atlas: I am afraid we are not helping the Judge.

Mr. Leisure: I have made my point. I won't argue further.

The Court: I am not going to have you make any requests out in open court, either one of you. I won't go for that. I got you in here to see whether we can agree on what I could tell them, so that there would be no question about it, but I am not going to have either one of you make a request that I further charge. I can't go for that.

Mr. Leisure: I won't do that.

Mr. Atlas: What was the question that they are asking, the second part?

The Court: "Did you say if the defendant is 'Not Guilty' on counts 17, to we must find him 'Not Guilty' on the remainder, and why?"

Mr. Leisure: I think you can explain to them that a circular is obscene in either one of two ways: It can be obscene on its face, or if it advertises something that is obscene, then it is also obscene, so that they must look to the publication and see if the material advertised is obscene.

In other words, it is possible in this type of case to have a typewritten page which says, "Send $5 for American Aphrodite", and that is obscene if American Aphrodite is obscene.

Mr. Atlas: May I say this. Would it be best, Judge, and wouldn't everybody be best served if you were to answer that second part of the question saying that if they find that the circulars are not obscene, then they will have to find that any of the exhibits mentioned in them are also not obscene?

[fol. 43] Mr. Leisure: I would like them to know why, the reason.

Mr. Atlas: I haven't finished.

Mr. Leisure: I am sorry.

Mr. Atlas: The reason being that such a circular could not be deemed to have been advertising where you could get obscene literature.

Mr. Leisure: I object to it only because it is summation.

The Court: You can't charge it both ways. There is only one way you can do it, and you can't do it without some danger.

Mr. Leisure: No, you can charge that if the publication is obscene, then the circular has to be obscene.

Mr. Atlas: If it advertises the publication.

Mr. Leisure: Yes. I think that is not unfair. I think it is a fair statement of the law.

Mr. Atlas: We are in your hands, Judge, I guess.

The Court: Well, supposing you go out. I want to give it a little thought.

Mr. Leisure: All right.

The Court: I will call you back when I get something worked out.

(Both counsel left the robing room and were later recalled.)

The Court: I am going to have the stenographer read my charge, starting in with "Insofar as you are concerned this indictment consists of twenty-three counts. You are not to concern yourselves with counts 12, 25 and 26, as they have been removed from your consideration. You are to consider each count separately in accordance with the rules I have given you. I repeat, in considering counts 1 to 17, excepting 12, which have to do with the circulars, you must consider whether they are obscene on their face, that is one, or two, if they give information where and how obscene matter may be obtained. If you find that a circular was not obscene on its face, you must consider it in the [fol. 44] light of those pictures and publications advertised in that circular and which have been introduced in evidence before you."

So that is in there.

"If you also find these pictures and publications not obscene, then your verdict must be not guilty on that particular count."

"It follows, of course, if you were to find the defendant not guilty on all of the first to seventeen counts, you would have to find him not guilty on the remaining counts."

Now I am going to ask them a question: do they have any question? And I will answer the question which I know I am going to get, this way:

"Or if they give information where and how obscene matter may be obtained; that if they gave information where and how obscene matter may be obtained, they can take into consideration in determining that question whether the exhibits introduced on the last seven counts are obscene."

Mr. Atlas: I just wanted to call your attention that the defendant hasn't been in here these couple of times.

The Court: He doesn't have to be in here.

Mr. Atlas: I wanted to make sure.

The Court: No, he is out there when the jury comes in and the whole thing will be done there. He doesn't have to be here.

(The following took place in the courtroom at 6.25 P. M., the jury being in the box:)

The Court: Now, the Court is in receipt of a communication from the jury which he will now read:

> "We need a clarification of your charge referring to counts 1 to 17 of the indictment as relating to the remainder of the counts.
>
> [fol. 45] "Specifically, did you say if the defendant is 'not guilty' on counts 1 to 17, we must find him 'not guilty' on the remainder, and why?"

I am going to have the stenographer read back to you now that portion of my charge which deals with those questions which you asked, and I would ask, as you have done all along, that you pay strict and particular attention to what the stenographer is about to read.

(Portion of charge as indicated in chambers read.)

The Court: After listening to that, does that help any? Or do you have any specific question in addition to that that you want to ask the Court?

Juror No. 10: I think that answers the question that we had, as far as I am aware. That was the only question, and that answers it fully.

Juror No. 2: May I ask a question, your Honor? I just noticed something in the reading of your charge, that you state there are counts up to 23, and especially 24, which includes Aphrodite, is omitted in that charge. It is only up to 23. Is there any reason for that, may I ask?

The Court: No, that isn't so. I say, "In considering counts 1 to 17, excepting 12, of course", and then I say "It follows, of course, if you were to find the defendant not guilty on all of the first 17 counts, you would have to find him not guilty on the remaining counts". I don't mention anything about 23 or anything that you say about it. What the Court said in that charge is that in determining counts 1 to 17, you are to consider whether they are obscene on their face, that is one. Or, if they give information where and how obscene matter may be obtained. If you find that the circular was not obscene on its face, you must consider it in the light of those pictures and publications advertised in that particular circular, and which have been introduced in evidence before you. In other words, what the Court [fol. 46] says is that in determining the second question, if they are not obscene on their face, if they give information where and how obscene matter may be obtained, in determining that question you have a right to take into consideration the exhibits which are introduced under the last seven counts which are now before you in the indictment, in determining whether or not they advertise, if they give information where and how obscene matter may be obtained.

Does that answer your question? Does that clear it up?

(Jury nodded assent.)

The Court: All right.

Now, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, would you like to get your dinner, have dinner before you go back for your deliberations?

Juror No. 11: It would give us a little rest.

The Foreman: I think it would be better.

The Court: Well, the reason I ask you is because it is a little bit hard to have to do it, and we will have a little trouble finding a place to eat downtown if we do it a little later, so I am going to direct that the jury be taken to dinner and come back after dinner and resume your deliberations.

Juror No. 5: I would just like to suggest, your Honor, that we be given just about three minutes together before we go to dinner, to make sure we have a meeting of the minds on what you have just told us.

The Court: All right, go ahead. When you get ready, rap on the door and I will send a marshal in.

The Foreman: Your Honor, would it be possible for the stenographer to transcribe that portion of the charge, have it right there?

The Court: I can't do that. I don't think I have any right to give you the charge. If it isn't clear to you, I will have him read it again.

The Foreman: I think we understand.

* * * * * * *

[fol. 47] IN UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

EXCERPTS FROM THE SUMMATION OF THE ASSISTANT UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Mr. Leisure: * * * we have called you here today to show you what has been sent through the mails, and to ask you to help the United States Government to enforce the law that has already been passed.

* * * * * * *

* * * The rest of the counts were proved by the people who actually received them and they all came here, and some came from quite some distance, and some came at quite some inconvenience to themselves, in order to stand up for what they thought is right.

* * * * * * *

There was Mr. Feldhouse, who comes from Parma, Ohio; a mother, who said her son had received this stuff in the mails. There was Mrs. Klovski, who came all the way from Dearborn, Michigan, here, to tell you about it. There was the Rev. L. W. Rockwell, who came here. He was a man, he told you, who is in charge of 88 delinquent children. Can you imagine the audacity of that man, mailing that envelope to the Uhlich Children's Home? That wasn't even addressed to an adult there. You have seen it, and I don't want to review the evidence in this case because I think you have certainly had a good dose of it.

And that woman who worked for Mr. Roth took the stand and she testified that this was typewritten; this wasn't a stencil. Somebody in that organization sat down and typed that out, "Uhlich Children's Home," and that is what they sent them.

Then there was Mr. Bissler, and there has been an awful lot of wisecracks in the case about Alliance, Ohio. Well, he is a plumber, and if you have lost a little bit of faith in mankind throughout this trial, just let me remind you that a plumber had the nerve not only to complain about this [fol. 48] but come all the way here to New York and testify and take the stand; and it isn't any fun to get up and be cross-examined and be asked whether or not your children are encouraged to read the Bible.

* * * * * * *

Well, those people have come in here and they have done everything that they can do; and I will say to you that they reminded me of you people, they reminded me a lot of you people and I don't think I have to stretch my imagination very far to think that if this kind of thing had been pouring into your homes, every one of you, or addressed to your children, that you would have been on the witness stand yourself, standing up for what you think is right.

Now those people have done everything they can do, and they are interested in this case; they are interested to see what you are going to do now.

You are in a much stronger position than any one of those people, because you hold in your hands the power to make a final determination of this.

* * * * * * *

Well, putting in those counts and those exhibits gave you a chance to see your post office employees in action. Do you remember the tall man from Georgia that came all the way up from Cordele, and the gentleman from Newfoundland who came all the way down from Canada, and the soft-spoken Mr. Nelson, who came up from Washington to testify? And there is Mr. Carr here, who sat throughout this case with me and who has worked months and months on this case before we ever came to trial.

I get a chance to stand up here now and do all the talking, but those men have done a tremendous job on this, and in [fol. 49] order to get it into court so that we can do something about this kind of thing. I think you can be proud of them. They are first-class public servants, and the defense would have you believe that something is wrong in the way they proceeded here on this test letter situation. They have enough respect for their own rules and regulations in the post office so that they won't open a firstclass letter. But it will be a sad day for the administration of justice when our hands are tied just became somebody uses the firstclass mail in order to distribute this kind of thing. So we went to all that kind of trouble to set that thing up in Georgia, and in Dover, and remote places like that, because we wanted to do it right, and because the courts of law have held that that is the proper way to proceed. We called those people from a great distance and at a great inconvenience because we want to do it right, not because we wanted to do it wrong.

* * * * * * *

I told you in my opening statement that there are many people who are watching this, because there is money in this; this stuff will sell. They are going to be interested to see whether you are going to make it legal or not. Let me say this: if you want me and these post office inspectors to continue to work and fight to stop this kind of thing, you can tell us that by bringing back a verdict as quickly as you possibly can, convicting him on every count in this indictment, and we will do it. And if you don't care, or if you want to continue it, then acquit him, and I can assure you that the sewers will open.

* * * * * * *

[fol. 50] IN UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT—October Term, 1955

No. 387

(Argued June 6, 1956 Docket No. 24030)

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellee

v.

SAMUEL ROTH, Appellant

Before: CLARK, Chief Judge, and FRANK and WATERMAN, Circuit Judges.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, John M. Cashin, Judge.

Samuel Roth appeals from his conviction for mailing obscene matter in violation of 18 U. S. C. § 1461. Affirmed.

GEORGE S. LEISURE, JR., Asst. U. S. Atty., S. D. N. Y., New York City (Paul W. Williams, U. S. Atty., New York City, on the brief), for appellee.

PHILLIP WITTENBERG, New York City (Wittenberg, Carrington & Farnsworth and Irving Like, New York City, on the brief), for appellant.

[fol. 51] OPINION—September 18, 1956

CLARK, Chief Judge:

This is an appeal by Samuel Roth from his conviction for violation of 18 U. S. C. § 1461. The indictment contained twenty-six counts charging the mailing of books, periodicals, and photographs (and circulars advertising some of them) alleged to be "obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy and of an indecent character." Three counts were dismissed. After a trial the jury found defendant guilty on four counts, and not guilty on nineteen. The trial judge sentenced defendant to five years' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $5,000 on one count, while on each of the other three counts he gave a like term of imprisonment, to run concurrently, and a $1 fine remitted in each case. On this appeal, defendant claims error in the conduct of the trial, but once again attacks the constitutionality of the governing statute.

This statute, 18 U. S. C. § 1461, originally passed as § 148 of the act of June 8, 1872, 17 Stat. 302, revising, consolidating, and amending the satutes relating to the Post Office Department, and thence derived from Rev. State. § 3893, herein declares unmailable "[e]very obscene, lewd, lascivious, or filthy book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character,"[1] and makes the knowing deposit for mailing of such unmailable matter subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment of not more than five years, or both. In United States v. Rebhuhn, 2 Cir., 109 F. 2d 512, 514, certiorari denied Rebhuhn v. United States, 310 U. S. 629, Judge Learned Hand, in dealing with a claim of unconstitutionality, pointed out that it had been overruled in Rosen v. United States, 161 U. S. 29, "and many indictments have since been found, and many persons tried and convicted. * * * If the question is to be reopened the Supreme Court must open it." Since [fol. 52] that decision many more cases have acknowledged the constitutionality of the statute, so much so that we feel it is not the part of responsible judicial administration for an inferior court such as ours, whatever our personal opinions, to initiate a new and uncharted course of overturn of a statute thus long regarded of vital social importance and a public policy of wide general support. It is easy, in matters touching the arts, to condescend to the poor troubled enforcement officials; but so to do will not carry us measurably nearer a permanent and generally acceptable solution of a continuing social problem.

---

[1] As pointed out below, the quoted wording was somewhat expanded by Congress in 1955, after the commission of the offenses here involved.

Against this background we are impressed by the decision this year of a great court in Brown v. Kingsley Books, Inc., 1 N. Y. 2d 177, 151 N. Y. S. 2d 639, 641, 642, where, accepting general constitutionality of such legislation, the decision breaks new ground in upholding authorization of preventive relief by way of injunction at the suit of a public officer.[2] In his opinion, Judge Fuld summarizes the controlling law thus: "That clearly drawn regulatory legislation to protect the public from the evils inherent in the dissemination of obscene matter, at least by the application of criminal sanctions, is not barred by the free speech guarantees of the First Amendment, has been recognized both by this court [citing cases] and by the United States Supreme Court [citing cases]." Among cases from New York which he cites is People v. Doubleday & Co., 297 N. Y. 687, 77 N. E. 2d 6, affirmed by an equally divided court, 335 U. S. 848, [fol. 53] while among the cases in the United States Supreme Court upon which he relies are United States v. Alpers, 338 U. S. 680; Winters v. People of State of New York, 333 U. S. 507, 510, 518, 520; and United States v. Limehouse, 285 U. S. 424. He goes on to say: "Imprecise though it be—its 'vague subject-matter' being largely 'left to the gradual development of general notions about what is decent' (per L. Hand, J., United States v. Kennerley, D. C., 209 F. 119, 121)—the concept of obscenity has heretofore been accepted as an adequate standard." In the case last cited, Judge Hand asked, "* * * should not the word 'obscene' be allowed to indicate the present critical point in the compromise between candor and shame at which the community may have arrived here and now?" and continued:

---

[2] The injunction against sale of paper-covered booklets "indisputably pornographic, indisputably obscene and filthy"—the words are Judge Fuld's, 1 N. Y. 2d 177, 151 N. Y. S. 2d 639, 640—was granted under a 1941 statute, N. Y. Code Cr. Proc. § 22-a, on suit of the Corporation Counsel of the City of New York. While the court was unanimous in holding the statute consitutional and the injunction proper, there were two opinions—a detailed analysis of the legal background by Judge Fuld, concurred in by two other judges, and a brief and more formal statement by Judge Desmond, concurred in by two other judges.

"If letters must, like other kinds of conduct, be subject to the social sense of what is right, it would seem that a jury should in each case establish the standard much as they do in cases of negligence." In quoting this with approval, the Ninth Circuit has recently said: "We think Judge Learned Hand was in the best of his famous form in his happy use of words." Besig v. United States, 9 Cir., 208 F. 2d 142, 147.

So this important social problem, which has come down to us from English law and which has led to statutes of a generally similar nature in almost all of the other jurisdictions in this country, see Brown v. Kingsley Books, Inc., supra, 1 N. Y. 2d 177, 151 N. Y. S. 2d 639; Note, 22 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 216, has resulted in a general judicial unanimity in supporting such prosecutions. There is a considerable body of additional precedents beyond those cited above, both in the Supreme Court of the United States and in other federal jurisdictions, of which various examples are given in the footnote.[3] It will not do to distinguish these [fol. 54] cases as dicta or suggest that they have not considered modern problems. They are too many and too much of a piece to allow an intermediate court to make an inference of doubt in the circumstances. We can understand all the difficulties of censorship of great literature, and indeed the various foolish excesses involved in the banning of notable books, without feeling justified in casting doubt upon all criminal prosecutions, both state and federal, of commercialized obscenity. A serious problem does arise when real literature is censored; but in this case no such issues should arise, since the record shows only salable pornography. But even if we had more freedom to follow an im-

---

[3] See, e.g., Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S. 727; Swearingen v. United States, 161 U. S. 446; Dunlop v. United States, 165 U. S. 486; Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194 U. S. 497, 508; Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 275, 281; Near v. Minnesota ex rel. Olson, 283 U. S. 697, 716; Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U. S. 568, 571-572; Beauharnais v. Illinois, 343 U. S. 250, 266; Schindler v. United States, 9 Cir. 221 F. 2d 743, certiorari denied 350 U. S. 938; United States v. Hornick, 3 Cir., 229 F. 2d 120, affirming D. C. E. D. Pa., 131 F. Supp. 603; Roth v. Goldman, 2 Cir., 172 F. 2d 788, certiorari denied 337 U. S. 938.

pulse to strike down such legislation in the premises, we shoud need to pause because of our own lack of knowledge of the social bearing of this problem, or consequences of such an act;[4] and we are hardly justified in rejecting out of hand the strongly held views of those with competence in the premises as to the very direct connection of this traffic with the development of juvenile delinquency.[5] We conclude, therefore, that the attack on constitutionality of this statute must here fail.

---

[4] See Fuld, J., in Brown v. Kingsley Books, Inc., 1 N. Y. 2d 177, 151 N. Y. S. 2d 639, 641, n. 3: "It is noteworthy that studies are for the first time being made, through such scientific skills as exist, concerning the impact of the obscene in writings and other mass media, on the mind and behavior of men, women and children. (See e.g., Jahoda and Staff Research Center for Human Relations, New York University [1954], The Impact of Literature: A Psychological Discussion of Some Assumptions in the Censorship Debate.)"

[5] Sen. Rep. No. 113, 84th Cong., 1st Sess., supporting the 1955 amendment to § 1461 discussed below, has this to say: "The subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary investigating juvenile delinquency in the United States reports that the nationwide traffic in obscene matter is increasing year by year and that a large part of that traffic is being channeled into the hands of children. That subcommittee recommended implementation of the present statute so as to prevent the using of the mails in the trafficking of all obscene matter. The passage of S. 600 will contribute greatly in the continuing struggle to combat juvenile delinquency and the corruption of public morals." 2 U. S. Code Cong. & Adm. News 2211 (1955).

See also Chief Justice Vanderbilt, Impasses in Justice, [1956] Wash. U. L. Q. 267, 302: "(4) Our greatest concern with the oncoming generation, I submit, relates to the perversion of young minds through the mass media of the movies, television, radio, and the press, especially so-called comics. Wertham, Seduction of the Innocent (1954). See also Feder, Comic Book Regulation (Univ. of Calif. Bureau of Pub. Admin. 1955). The problem is only beginning to receive the consideration its seriousness calls for. Here is a [fol. 55] Defendant, however, takes special exception to the judge's treatment in his charge of the word "filthy," asserting that he opposed this term to the other parts of the statute, so as to render the statute vague and indefinite. What the judge said was this: " 'Filthy' as used here must also relate to sexual matters. It is distinguishable from the term 'obscene,' which tends to promote lust and impure thoughts. 'Filthy' pertains to that sort of treatment of sexual matters in such a vulgar and indecent way, so that it tends to arose a feeling of disgust and revulsion." But this seems to us in line with long-standing judicial definitions of the term. The words 'and every filthy" were inserted in the statute at the time of the enactment of the Penal Code in 1909. And in United States v. Limehouse, supra, 285 U. S. 424, 426, in 1932, Mr. Justice Brandeis for the Court pointed out the obvious intent to add "a new class of unmailable matter—the filthy." As he definitely pointed out, this plainly covered sexual matters; and the Court, [fol. 56] so he said, had no occasion to consider whether filthy matter of a different character also fell within the prohibition. We do not see how this case can be read other than as support for the interpretation made by the court below and for the validity of the Act as interpreted. Moreover, earlier it had been ruled by the Sixth Circuit in Tyomies Pub. Co. v. United States, 6 Cir., 211 F. 385, 390, in 1914, that the trial judge properly submitted the issue to the jury as to whether or not a picture was filthy with the explanation: "By the term 'filthy' is meant what it commonly or ordinarily signifies; that which is nasty, dirty, vulgar, indecent, offensive to the moral sense, morally depraving and debasing." This is in substance what Judge Cashin charged here. See also United States v. Davidson, D. C. N. D. N. Y., 244 F. 523, 534, 535; Sunshine Book Co. v. Summerfield, D. C. D. C., 128 F. Supp. 564.

---

field in which the law schools are well equipped to furnish leadership in a controversy where rare discrimination and courage are required."

Perhaps scholarly research may suggest better statutes than we have; but it is doubtful if help can be found in such suggestions as for the inclusion in legislation of the enticing invitation, "For Adults Only." Cf. Ernst & Seagle, To the Pure 277 (1928).

Hence, having in mind Judge Hand's admonition in United States v. Kennerley, supra, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 209 F. 119, 121, that the jury must finally apply the standard thus indicated, we think there was nothing objectionable in the judge's instructions to the jury. Certainly, against this background, "filthy" is as clear and as easily understandable by the jury [6] as the terms "obscene" and "lewd" already committed to its care. Possibly some different nuances might have been given the term—though we are not sure what, nor are we given suggestions—but we cannot believe that the jury would have been helped. Nor did the defendant at the time find anything to question in the charge; his counsel, after the judge had granted all the specific additional requests he made, said that the judge had "fairly covered everything." Now he is not in a position to press this objection. Here we have more than a waiver by failure [fol. 57] to object. We have in fact an instance of submission of issues to the jury on more than a single ground which might have been separated had the parties so desired. Since no request for separate verdicts or for withdrawal of this issue from the jury was made, the conviction must stand as supported by the clear evidence of obscenity. United States v. Mascuch, 2 Cir., 111 F. 2d 602, certiorari denied Mascuch v. United States, 311 U. S. 650; United States v. Smith, 2 Cir., 112 F. 2d 83, 86; United States v. Goldstein, 2 Cir., 168 F. 2d 666, 672; Claassen v. United States, 142 U. S. 140, 147; Stevens v. United States, 6 Cir., 206 F. 2d 64, 66; Todorow v. United States, 9 Cir., 173 F. 2d 439, 445, certiorari denied 337 U. S. 925; United States v. Myers, D. C. N. D. Cal., 131 F. Supp. 525, 528. On either ground, therefore, this assignment of error must fail.

Our conclusion here settles the substantial issues on this appeal. As we have indicated, if the statute is to be upheld at all it must apply to a case of this kind where defendant is an old hand at publishing and surreptitiously mailing to those induced to order them such lurid pictures and material as he can find profitable. There was ample evidence for the jury, and the defendant had an unusual trial in that the judge allowed him to produce experts, including a psychologist who stated that he would find nothing obscene at the present time. Also various modern novels were submitted to the jury for the sake of comparison. Very likely the jury's moderate verdict on only a few of the many counts submitted by the government and supported by the testimony of those who had been led to send their orders through the mail was because of this wide scope given the defense. As the judge pointed out in imposing sentence, defendant has been convicted several times before under both state and federal law. Indeed this case and our discussions somewhat duplicate his earlier appearance [fol. 58] in Roth v. Goldman, 2 Cir., 172 F. 2d 788, certiorai denied 337 U. S. 938.

---

[6] And by Judge Fuld and his colleagues; see supra note 2.

Defendant claims error in entrapment because his advertisements were answered by government representatives. But this method of obtaining evidence was specifically approved in Rosen v. United States, supra, 161 U. S. 29, 42, and has been usual at least ever since. Ackley v. United States, 8 Cir., 200 F. 217, 222. In no event was there any improper entrapment. See United States v. Masciale, 2 Cir., Aug. 22, 1956. The government's summation in the case was within the scope of the evidence, and the court's charge was concise and correct. But one other matter needs to engage our attention. That was the defendant's claim of error in that the court charged with respect to the statute as it was at the time of the offenses, although it had been amended on June 28, 1955, or before the trial. But this amendment was designed to stiffen the Act and arose because in Alpers v. United States, 9 Cir., 175 F. 2d 137, a conviction for mailing obscene phonograph records was reversed on the ground that such records were not clearly embodied in the statutory language quoted above. Although this decision was reversed and the conviction reinstated in United States v. Alpers, supra, 333 U. S. 680, the Congress was so anxious that there be no loophole that it enacted an amendment making unmailable now "[e]very obscene, lewd, lascivious, indecent, filthy or vile article, matter, thing, device, or substance."[7] It would seem clear, therefore, that defendant has no ground of complaint because he was tried under the statute existing at the time of his offense; and in no event could he have been harmed.

---

[7] It also eliminated the former fifth paragraph now superfluous. See the Senate Report cited supra note 5.

Judgment affirmed.

[fol. 59] FRANK, Circuit Judge, concurring:

The reference in Judge Clark's opinion to juvenile delinquency, might lead the casual reader to suppose that, under the statute, the test of what constitutes obscenity is its effect on minors, and that the defendant, Roth, has been convicted for mailing obscene writings to (or for sale to) children. This court, however, in U. S. v. Levine, 83 F. 2d 156 (C. A. 2), has held that the correct test is the effect on the sexeual thoughts and desires, not of the "young" or "immature," but of average, normal, adult persons. The trial judge here so instructed the jury.*

On the basis of that test, the jury could reasonably have found, beyond a reasonable doubt, that many of the books, periodicals, pamphlets and pictures which defendant mailed were obscene. Accordingly, I concur.

---

* He said: "The test is not whether it would arouse sexual desires or sexually impure thoughts in those comprising a particular segment of the community, the young, the immature or the highly prudish. * * * In other words, you must determine its impact upon the average person in the community."

 The statute condemns the mailing not only of "obscene" matter but also of "filthy" matter. Parts of the indictment here charged the defendant with mailing "filthy" publications. The trial judge told the jury they could convict the defendant for mailing a "filthy" publication, if they found that it treated "sexual matters in such a vulgar and indecent way so that it tends to arouse a feeling of disgust or aversion." The following contention might be urged:

> The very argument advanced to sustain the statute's validity, so far as it condemns the obscene, goes to show the invalidity of the statute so far as it condemns "filth," if "filth" means that which renders sexual desires "disgusting." For if the argument be sound

[fol. 60] I do so although I have much difficulty in reconciling the validity of that statute with opinions of the Supreme Court, uttered within the past twenty-five years,* relative to the First Amendment as applied to other kinds of legislation. The doctrine expressed in those opinions, as that the legislature may constitutionally provide punishment for the obscene because, anti-socially, it arouses sexual desires by making sex attractive, then it follows that whatever makes sex disgusting is socially beneficial —and thus not the subject of valid legislation which punishes the mailing of "filthy" matter. To avoid this seeming inconsistency, the statute should be interpreted as follows: The mailing of a "filthy" matter is a crime if that matter tends to induce acts by the recipient which will cause breaches of the peace. This interpretation is in line with U. S. v. Limehouse, 285 U. S. 424. There the Court affirmed the conviction of a defendant who had mailed letters to divers persons which, in "foul language," accused them of sexual immorality. Those letters thus were within the category of "fighting words"—i.e., insulting words or the like—which may constitutionally be made criminal precisely because they tend to provoke breaches of the peace. Where, however, "filthy" language appears in a book, or picture, and involves no insults to particular persons, there will be no such consequences.

---

If this were the correct interpretation of "filthy," then that part of the statute condemning the "filthy" would not apply to the acts of the defendant here, and the judge's instructions re "filthy" would have been erroneous.

But I think we need not here consider that interpretation since I agree with my colleagues that, for the reasons they state, assuming there was error, the defendant's deliberate acquiescence in the judge's instructions prevents him from now so asserting.

* "For nearly 130 years after its adoption, the First Amendment received scant attention from the Supreme Court"; Emerson, The Doctrine of Prior Restraint, 20 L & Cont. Problems (1955) 648, 652.

I understand it, may be summarized briefly as follows: Any statute authorizing governmental interference (whether by "prior restraint" or punishment) with free speech or free press runs counter to the First Amendment, except when the government can show that the statute strikes at words which are likely to incite to a breach of the peace, or with sufficient probability tend either to the over-throw of the government by illegal means or to some other overt anti-social conduct.†

[fol. 61] The troublesome aspect of the federal obscenity statute—as I shall try to explain in the Appendix to this opinion—is that (a) no one can now show that, with any reasonable probability obscene publications tend to have any effects on the behavior of normal, average adults, and (b) that under that statute, as judicially interpreted, punishment is apparently inflicted for provoking, in such adults, undesirable sexual thoughts, feelings, or desires—not overt dangerous or anti-social conduct, either actual or probable.

Often the discussion of First Amendment exceptions has been couched in terms of a "clear and present danger." However, the meaning of that phrase has been somewhat watered down by Dennis v. U. S., 341 U. S. 494. The test now involves probability: "In each case (courts) must ask," said Chief Justice Vinson in Dennis, "whether the gravity of the 'evil' discounted by its improbability, justifies such invasion of free speech as is necessary to avoid the danger." It has been suggested that the test now is this: "The more serious and threatened the evil, the lower the required degree of probability." * It would seem to follow that the less clear the danger, the more imminent must it be. At any

---

 See, e.g., Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U. S. 568, 572.

† The judicial enforcement of private rights—as in suits, e.g., for defamation, injury to business, fraud, or invasion of privacy—comes within the exception.

* Lockhart and McClure, Obscenity and The Constitution, 38 Minn. L. Rev. (1954) 295, 357; cf. Kalven, The Law of Defamation and the First Amendment, in (University of Chicago) Conference on The Arts, Publishing and the Law (1952) 3, 12.

rate, it would seem that (1) the danger or evil must be clear (i.e., identifiable) and substantial, and (2) that, since the statute renders words punishable, it is invalid unless those words tend, with a fairly high degree of probability, to incite to overt conduct which is obviously harmful. For, under the First Amendment, lawless or anti-social "acts are the main thing. Speech is not punishable for its own sake, but only because of its connection with those * * * acts * * * But more than a remote connection is neces- [fol. 62] sary * * * "* See, e.g., Communications Ass'n v. Douds, 339 U. S. 382, 398, as to "the right of the public to be protected from evils of conduct, even though the First Amendment rights of persons or groups are thereby in some manner infringed." (Emphasis added.)

As I read the Supreme Court's opinions, the government, in defending the constitutionality of a statute which curbs free expression, may not rely on the usual "presumption of validity." No matter how one may articulate the reasoning, it is now accepted doctrine that, when legislation affects free speech or free press, the government must show that the legislation comes within one of the exceptions described above. See, e.g., Dennis v. U. S., 341 U. S. 494; Joseph Burstyn Inc. v. Wilson, 343 U. S. 495, 503. Moreover, when legislation affects free expression, the void-for-vagueness doctrine has a peculiar importance; and the obscenity statute is exquisitely vague. (See the Appendix, point 9.)

True, the Supreme Court has said several times that the federal obscenity statute (or any such state statute) is constitutional. But the Court has not directly so decided; it has done so sub silentio in applying the federal statute, or has referred to the constitutionality of such legislation in dicta. The Court has not thoroughly canvassed the problem in any opinion, nor applied to it the doctrine (summarized above) concerning the First Amendment which the Court has evolved in recent years. I base that statement on the following analysis of the cases:

> In Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S. 727 (1877), the Court held valid a statute relating to the mailing of letters, or circulars, concerning lotteries. Such letters or cir-

---

* Chafee, The Blessings of Liberty (1956) 69.

culars might well induce the addressees to engage in the overt conduct of engaging in lotteries. The Court, [fol. 63] only in passing, referred to the obscenity statute and said it, too, was valid.

In Rosen v. U. S., 161 U. S. 29 (1896), the issue was solely the sufficiency of an indictment under the obscenity statute, not the validity of that legislation, and the Court did not discuss its validity.

In Van Swearingen v. U. S., 161 U. S. 446 (1896), the Court reversed a conviction under the obscenity statute; it did not consider its constitutionality.

Dunlop v. U. S., 165 U. S. 486 (1896), did not discuss the constitutionality of the statute; moreover, the opinion (at 501) shows that it dealt with advertisements soliciting improper sexual relations, i.e., with probable conduct, not with mere thoughts or desires.

In Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194 U. S. 497 (1904), which did not involve the validity of any obscenity Act, the Court said in passing (p. 508) that its constitutionality "has never been attacked."

In U. S. v. Limehouse, 285 U. S. 424 (1932), the Court decided the correct interpretation of the word "filthy" in the statute, and did not consider the question of constitutionality. Moreover, there the defendant had mailed letters attacking the characters of the recipients who might well have been moved to conduct in breach of the peace.

In Winters v. New York, 333 U. S. 507 (1948), the Court held void for vagueness a state statute making it a crime to distribute publications consisting principally of news or stories of criminal deeds of bloodshed or lust so massed as to become vehicles for inciting violent and depraved crimes. The Court said in passing (p. 510) that legislation subjecting obscene publications to governmental control is valid.

In Doubleday v. New York, 335 U. S. 848 (1948), the Court, by an evenly divided vote, without opinion af- [fol. 64] firmed a state court decision sustaining a state obscenity statute.

In U. S. v. Alpers, 338 U. S. 680 (1950), the Court construed the statute as amended, and affirmed a conviction thereunder, but did not consider its constitutionality.

In the following cases, where the validity of no obscenity statute was involved, the Court, in passing, referred to such legislation as valid: Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 275, 281 (1897); Near v. Minnesota, 283 U. S. 697, 716 (1931); Lovell v. Griffin, 303 U. S. 444, 451 (1938); Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U. S. 568, 571-572 (1942); Beauharnais v. Illinois, 343 U. S. 250, 266 (1952).

I agree with my colleagues that, since ours is an inferior court, we should not hold invalid a statute which our superior has thus often said is constitutional (albeit without any full discussion). Yet I think it not improper to set forth, as I do in the Appendix, considerations concerning the obscenity statute's validity which, up to now, I think the Supreme Court has not discussed in any of its opinions. I do not suggest the inevitability of the conclusion that that statute is unconstitutional. I do suggest that it is hard to avoid that conclusion, if one applies to that legislation the reasoning the Supreme Court has applied to other sorts of legislation. Perhaps I have overlooked conceivable compelling contrary arguments. If so, maybe my Appendix will evoke them.

To preclude misunderstanding of my purpose in stirring doubts about this statute, I think it well to add the following:

(a) As many of the publications mailed by defendant offend my personal taste, I would not cross a street to obtain them for nothing; I happen not to be interested in [fol. 65] so-called "pornography"; and I think defendant's motives obnoxious. But if the statute were invalid, the merit of those publications would be irrelevant. Winters v. New York, 333 U. S. 507, 510. So, too, as to defendant's motives: "Although the defendant may be the worst of men * * * the rights of the best of men are secure only as the right of the vilest and most abhorrent are protected." *

---

* Judge Cuthbert Pound dissenting in People v. Gitlow, 234 N. Y. 132, 158.

(b) It is most doubtful (as explained in the Appendix) whether anyone can now demonstrate that children's reading or looking at obscene matter has a probable causal relation to the children's anti-social conduct. If, however, such a probable causal relation could be shown, there could be little doubt, I think, of the validity of a statute (if so worded as to avoid undue ambiguity) which specifically prohibits the distribution by mail of obscene publications for sale to young people. But discussion of such legislation is here irrelevant, since, to repeat, the existing federal statute is not thus restricted.

(c) Congress undoubtedly has wide power to protect public morals. But the First Amendment severely limits that power in the area of free speech and free press.

(d) It is argued that anti-obscenity legislation is valid because, at the time of the adoption of the First Amendment, obscenity as a common law crime. Relying (inter alia) on Bridges v. California, 341 U. S. 252, 264-265 and [fol. 66] Grosjean v. American Press, 297 U. S. 233, 248-249, I have tried in the Appendix to answer that argument.

(e) The First Amendment, of course, does not prevent any private body or group (including any Church) from instructing, or seeking to persuade, its adherents or others not to read or distribute obscene (or other) publications. That constitutional provision—safeguarding a principle indispensable in a true democracy—leaves unhampered all non-governmental means of molding public opinion about not reading literature which some think undesirable; and, in that respect, experience teaches that democratically exercised censorship by public opinion has far more potency, and is far less easily evaded, than censorship by govern-

---

 The Appendix contains a discussion of the writings of those described by Judge Clark as persons "with competence in the premises." It tries to show (1) that the overwhelming majority of persons with such competence assert that there is no justification for the thesis that a demonstrable causal relation exists between reading or seeing the obscene and anti-social conduct, even of children, and (2) that the chief proponent of the opposite view with respect to the effect on children's conduct does not maintain the same as to adult conduct.

ment.* The incessant struggle to influence public opinion is of the very essence of the democratic process. A basic purpose of the First Amendment is to keep that struggle alive, by not permitting the dominant public opinion of the present to become embodied in legislation which will prevent the formation of a different dominant public opinion in the future.

(f) At first glance it may seem almost frivolous to raise any question about the constitutionality of the obscenity statute at a time when many seemingly graver First Amendment problems confront the courts. But (for reasons stated in more detail in the Appendix) governmental [fol. 67] censorship of writings, merely because they may stimulate, in the reader, sexual thoughts the legislature deems undesirable, has more serious implications than appear at first glance: We have been warned by eminent thinkers, of the easy path from any apparently mild governmental control of what adult citizens may read to governmental control of adult's political and religious reading. John Milton, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, J. S. Mill and Tocqueville have pointed out that any paternalistic guardianship by government of the thoughts of grown-up citizens enervates their spirit, keeps them immature, all too ready to adopt towards government officers the attitude that, in general, "Papa knows best." If the government possesses the power to censor publications which arouse

---

* Public opinion, by influencing social attitudes, may create a convention, with no governmental "sanction" behind it, far more coercive than any statute. Cf. Holmes, Codes and The Arrangement of the Law, 2 Am. L. Rev. (1870) 4, 5.

Notably is this true of conventions as to obscenity: La Barre, Obscenity: An Anthropological Appraisal, 20 L & Con. Problems (1955) 533.

 The results of current public opinion may not always be happy. But our democracy accepts the postulate that, in the long run, the struggle to sway public opinion will produce the wisest policies. For further discussion of this theme, see the Appendix.

sexual thoughts, regardless of whether those thoughts tend probably to transform themselves into anti-social behavior, why may not the government censor political and religious publications regardless of any causal relation to probable dangerous deeds? And even if we confine attention to official censorship of publications tending to stimulate sexual thoughts, it should be asked why, at any moment, that censorship cannot be extended to advertisements and true reports or photographs, in our daily press, which, fully as much, may stimulate such thoughts?

(g) Assuming, arguendo, that a statute aims at an altogether desirable end, nevertheless its desirability does not render it constitutional. As the Supreme Court has said, "The good sought in unconstitutional legislation is an insidious feature because it leads citizens and legislatures of good purpose to promote it without thought of the serious break it will make in the ark of our covenant. * * * "*

In a concurring opinion in Roth v. Goldman, 172 F. 2d 788, 790 (1948), I voiced puzzlement about the constitution-[fol. 68] ality of administrative prior restraint of obscene books. I then had little doubt about the validity of a purely punitive obscenity statute. But the next year, in Commonwealth v. Gordon, 6 Pa. C & D 101 (1949), Judge Curtis Bok, one of America's most reflective judges, directly attacked the validity of any such punitive legislation. His brilliant opinion, which states arguments that (so far as I know) have never been answered, nudged me into the skeptical views contained in this opinion and the Appendix.

[fol. 69] APPENDIX

As a judge of an inferior court, I am constrained by opinions of the Supreme Court concerning the obscenity statute to hold that legislation valid. Since, however, I think (as indicated in the foregoing) that none of those opinions has carefully canvassed the problem in the light of the Supreme Court's interpretation of the First Amendment, especially as expressed by the Court in recent years, I deem it not improper to set forth, in the following, factors which I think deserve consideration in passing on the constitutionality of that statute.

---

* The Child Labor Tax Case, 259 U. S. 20, 37.

1

Benjamin Franklin, in 1776 unanimously designated Postmaster General by the First Continental Congress, is appropriately known as the "father of the Post Office." Among his published writings are two [1]—Letter of Advice to Young Men on the Proper Choosing of a Mistress and The Speech of Polly Baker—which a jury could reasonably find "obscene," according to the judge's instructions in the case at bar. On that basis, if tomorrow a man were to send those works of Franklin through the mails, he would be subject to prosecution and (if the jury found him guilty) to punishment under the federal obscenity statute.[2]

That fact would surely have astonished Jefferson, who extolled Franklin as an American genius,[3] called him "venerable and beloved" of his countrymen,[4] and wrote approv- [fol. 70] ingly of Franklin's Polly Baker.[5] No less would it have astonished Madison, also an admirer of Franklin (whom he described as a man whose "genius" was "an ornament of human nature") [5a] and himself given to telling

---

[1] See Van Doren, Benjamin Franklin (1938) 150-151, 153-154.

Franklin's Letter to The Academy of Brussels (see Van Doren, 151-152) might be considered "filthy."

[2] 18 U. S. C. Section 1461.

[3] Jefferson, Notes on the State of Virginia (1781-1785), Query VI; See Padover, The Complete Jefferson (1943) 567 at 612.

[4] Jefferson, Autobiography (1821); See Padover, loc. cit., 1119 at 1193.

[5] Jefferson, Anecdotes of Franklin (1818); see Padover, loc. cit., 892 at 893.

[5a] On Franklin's death, Madison offered the following resolution which the House of Representatives unanimously adopted: "The House being informed of the decease of Benjamin Franklin, a citizen whose genius was not more of an ornament of human nature than his various exertions of it have been to science, to freedom and to his country, do

"Rabelaisian anecdotes."[6] Nor was the taste of these men unique in the American Colonies: "Many a library of a colonial planter in Virginia or a colonial intellectual in New England boasted copies of Tom Jones, Tristram Shandy, Ovid's Art of Love, and Rabelais. * * * "[7]

As, with Jefferson's encouragement, Madison, in the first session of Congress, introduced what became the First Amendment, it seems doubtful that the constitutional guaranty of free speech and free press could have been intended [fol. 71] to allow Congress validly to enact the "obscenity" Act. That doubt receives reinforcement from the following:

In 1799, eight years after the adoption of the First Amendment, Madison, in an Address to the General Assembly of Virginia,[8] said that the "truth of opinion" ought not to be subject to "imprisonment, to be inflicted by those of a different opinion"; he there also asserted that it would sub-resolve, as a mark of veneration due to his memory, that the members wear the customary badge of mourning for one month." Brant, James Madison, Father of the Constitution (1950) 309; Annals, April 22, 1790.

---

[6] Padover, The Complete Madison (1953) 8-9.

George Washington, who knew Franklin well, treasured a gold-headed cane given him by Franklin. See Padover, The Washington Papers (1955) 112.

See Judge Bok, in Commonwealth v. Gordon, 66 Pa. D & C 101, 120-121: "One need only recall that the father of the post office, Benjamin Franklin, wrote and presumably mailed his letter of Advice to Young Men on the Proper Choosing of a Mistress; that Thomas Jefferson worried about the students at his new University of Virginia having a respectable brothel; that Alexander Hamilton's adultery while holding public office created no great scandal * * * "

[7] Ernst and Seagle, To The Pure (1928) 108.

Everyone interested in obscenity legislation owes a deep debt to many writings on the subject by Morris Ernst. For such an acknowledgment, see Acknowledgments in Blanshard, The Right to Read (1955).

[8] See Padover, The Complete Madison (1953) 295-296.

vert the First Amendment [9] to make a "distinction between the freedom and the licentiousness of the press." Previously, in 1792, he wrote that "a man has property in his opinions and free communication of them," and that a government which "violates the property which individuals have in their opinion * * * is not a pattern for the United States." [10] Jefferson's proposed Constitution for Virginia (1776), provided: "Printing presses shall be free, except so far as by commission of private injury cause may be given of private action." [11] In his Second Inaugural Address (1805), he said: "No inference is here intended that the laws provided by the State against false and defamatory publications should not be enforced * * * The press, confined to truth, needs no other restraint * * * ; and no other definite line can be drawn between the inestimable liberty of the press and demoralizing licentiousness. If there still be improprieties which this rule would not restrain, its supplement must be sought in the censorship of public opinion."

The broad phrase in the First Amendment, prohibiting legislation abridging "freedom of speech or of the press," includes the right to speak and write freely for the public [fol. 72] concerning any subject. As the Amendment specifically refers "to the free exercise of religion" and to the right "of the people to assemble" and to "petition the government for a redress of grievances," it specifically includes the right freely to speak to and write for the public concerning government and religion; but it does not limit this right to those topics. Accordingly, the views of Jefferson and Madison about the freedom to speak and write concerning religion are relevant to a consideration of the constitutional freedom in respect of all other subjects. Consider, then, what those men said about freedom of religious discussion: Madison, in 1799, denouncing the distinction "between the freedom and the licentiousness of the press" said, "By its help, the judge as to what is licen-

---

[9] Madison referred to the "Third Amendment," but the context shows he meant the First.

[10] See Padover, The Complete Madison (1953) 267, 268-269.

[11] Padover, The Complete Jefferson (1943) 109.

tious may escape through any constitutional restriction,'' and added, ''Under it, Congress might denominate a religion to be heretical and licentious, and proceed to its suppression * * * Remember * * * that it is to the press mankind are indebted for having dispelled the clouds which long encompassed religion * * *''[12] Jefferson, in 1798, quoting the First Amendment, said it guarded ''in the same sentence, and under the same words, the freedom of religion, of speech, and of the press; insomuch, that whatever violates either, throws down the sanctuary which covers the others.''[13] In 1814, he wrote in a letter, ''I am really mortified to be told that in the United States of America, a fact like this (the sale of a book) can become a subject of inquiry, and of criminal inquiry too, as an offense against religion; that (such) a question can be carried before the civil magistrate. Is this then our freedom of religion? And are we to have a censor whose imprimatur shall say what books may be sold and what we may buy? * * * Whose [fol. 73] foot is to be the measure to which ours are all to be cut or stretched?''[14]

Those utterances high-light this fact: Freedom to speak publicly and to publish has, as its inevitable and important correlative, the private rights to hear, to read, and to think and to feel about what one hears and reads. The First Amendment protects those private rights of hearers and readers.

We should not forget that, prompted by Jefferson,[15] Madison (who at one time had doubted the wisdom of a Bill of Rights)[16] when he urged in Congress the enactment of what became the first ten Amendments, declared, ''If they are incorporated into the Constitution, independent

---

[12] Madison, Address to the General Assembly of Virginia, 1799; see Padover, The Complete Madison (1953) 295.

[13] See Padover, The Complete Jefferson (1943) 130.

[14] See Padover, The Complete Jefferson (1943) 889.

[15] Jefferson's Letter to Madison (1789); Padover, The Complete Jefferson (1943) 123-125. See also Brant, James Madison, Father of the Constitution (1950) 267.

[16] The Federalist No. 84; Cahn, The Firstness of the First Amendment, 65 Yale L. J. (1956) 464.

tribunals of justice will consider themselves in a peculiar manner the guardian of those rights; they will be an impenetrable barrier against every assumption of power in the Legislative or Executive; they will be naturally led to resist every encroachment upon rights expressly stipulated for in the Constitution by the declaration of rights."[17] In short, the Bill of Rights, including the First Amendment, was not designed merely as a set of admonitions to the legislature and the executive; its provisions were to be enfroced by the courts.

Judicial enforcement necessarily entails judicial interpretation. The question therefore arises whether the courts, in enforcing the First Amendment, should interpret it in accord with the views prevalent among those who [fol. 74] sponsored and adopted it or in accord with subsequently developed views which would sanction legislation more restrictive of free speech and free press.

So the following becomes pertinent: Some of those who in the 20th Century endorse legislation suppressing "obscene" literature have an attitude towards freedom of expression which does not match that of the framers of the First Amendment (adopted at the end of the 18th Century) but does stem from an attitude, towards writings dealing with sex, which arose decades later, in the mid-19th Century, and is therefore labelled—doubtless too sweepingly—"Victorian." It was a dogma of "Victorian morality" that sexual misbehavior would be encouraged if one were to "acknowledge its existence or at any rate to present it vividly enough to form a life-like image of it in the reader's mind"; this morality rested on a "faith that you could best conquer evil by shutting your eyes to its existence,"[18] and on a kind word of magic.[19] The demands at that time for

---

[17] Madison, Writings (Hunt ed.) V, 385; Corwin, Liberty Against Government (1948) 58-59; Cahn, The Firstness of the First Amendment, 64 Yale L. J. (1956) 464, 468.

[18] Wingfield-Stratford, Those Earnest Victorians (1930) 151.

[19] See Kaplan, Obscenity as an Esthetic Category, 20 Law & Contemp. Problems (1955) 544, 550: "In many cultures,

"decency" in published words did not comport with the actual sexual conduct of many of those who made those demands: "The Victorians, as a general rule, managed to conceal the 'coarser' cide of their lives so thoroughly under a mask of respectability that we often fail to realize how 'coarse' it really was * * * Could we have recourse to the vast unwritten literature of bawdry, we should be able to form a more veracious notion of life as it (then) really was." The respectables of those days often "with unblush-[fol. 75] ing license," held "high revels" in "night houses." [20] Thanks to them, Mrs. Warren's profession flourished, but it was considered sinful to talk about it in books.[21] Pretty obviously, those "Victorians" did not suppress obscene books in the belief that the reading of those books induced the very sexual behavior which the suppressors themselves practiced. Such a prudish and purely verbal moral code, at odds (more or less hypocritically) with the the actual conduct of its adherents[22] was (as we have seen) not the moral code of those who framed the First Amendment.[23] One would suppose, then, that the courts should interpret and enforce that Amendment according to the obscenity has an important part in magical rituals. In our own, its magical character is betrayed in the puritan's supposition that words alone can work evil, and that evil will be averted if only the words are not uttered."

---

[20] Wingfield-Stratford, loc. cit. 296-297.

[21] Paradoxically, this attitude apparently tends to "create" obscenity. For the foundation of obscenity seems to be secrecy and shame: "The secret becomes shameful because of its secrecy." Kaplan, Obscenity As An Esthetic Category, 20 Law & Contemp. Problems (1955) 544, 556.

[22] To be sure, every society has "pretend-rules" (moral and legal) which it publicly voices but does not enforce. Indeed, a gap necessarily exists between a society's ideals, if at all exalted, and its practices. But the extent of the gap is significant. See, e.g., Frank, Lawlessness, Encyc. of Soc. Sciences (1932); cf. Frank, Preface to Kahn, a Court for Children (1953).

[23] It is of interest that not until the Tariff Act of 1824 did Congress enact any legislation relative to obscenity.

views of those framers, not according to the later "Victorian" code.[24]

The "founding fathers" did not accept the common law concerning freedom of expression

It has been argued that the federal obscenity statute is valid because obscenity was a common law crime at the time of the adoption of the First Amendment. Quite aside from [fol. 76] the fact that, previous to the Amendment, there had been scant recognition of this crime, the short answer seems to be that the framers of the Amendment knowingly and deliberately intended to depart from the English common law as to freedom of speech and freedom of the press. See Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U. S. 233, 248-249; Bridges v. California, 314 U. S. 252, 264-265;[24a] Patterson, [24] For discussion of the suggestion that many constitutional provisions provide merely minimum safeguards which may properly be enlarged—not diminished—to meet newly emerging needs and policies, see Supreme Court and Supreme Law (Cahn ed. 1954) 59-64.

---

[24a] In Bridges v. California, 314 U. S. 252, 264-265, the Court said: "In any event it need not detain us, for to assume that English common law in this field became ours is to deny the generally accepted historical belief that 'one of the objects of the Revolution was to get rid of the English common law on liberty of speech and of the press.' Schofield, Freedom of the Press in the United States, 9 Publications Amer. Sociol. Soc., 67, 76. More specifically, it is to forget the environment in which the First Amendment was ratified. In presenting the proposals which were later embodied in the Bill of Rights, James Madison, the leader in the preparation of the First Amendment said: 'Although I know whenever the great rights, the trial by jury, freedom of the press, or liberty of conscience, come in question in that body (Parliament), the invasion of them is resisted by able advocates, yet their Magna Charta does not contain any one provision for the security of those rights, respecting which the people of America are most alarmed. The freedom of the press and rights of conscience, those choicest privileges of the people, are unguarded in the [fol. 77] Free Speech and a Free Press (1939) 101-102, 124-125, 128; Schofield, 2 Constitutional Law and Equity (1921) 521-525.

Of course, the legislature has wide power to protect what it considers public morals. But the First Amendment severly circumscribes that power (and all other legislative powers) in the area of speech and free press.

British Constitution.' 1 Annals of Congress 1789-1790, 434. And Madison elsewhere wrote that 'the state of the press * * * under the common law cannot * * * be the standard of its freedom in the United States.' VI Writings of James Madison 1790-1802, 387. There are no contrary implications in any part of the history of the period in which the First Amendment was framed and adopted. No purpose in ratifying the Bill of Rights was clearer than that of securing for the people of the United States much greater freedom of religion, expression, assembly, and petition than the people of Great Britain had ever enjoyed. It cannot be denied, for example, that the religious test oath or the restrictions upon assembly then prevalent in England would have been regarded as measures which the Constitution prohibited the American Congress from passing. And since the same unequivocal language is used with respect to freedom of the press, it signifies a similar enlargement of that concept as well. Ratified as it was while the memory of many oppressive English restrictions on the enumerated liberties was still fresh, the First Amendment cannot reasonably be taken as approving prevalent English practices. On the contrary, the only conclusion supported by history is that the unqualified prohibitions laid down by the framers were intended to give to liberty of the press, as to the other liberties, the broadest scope that could be countenanced in an orderly society."

In Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U. S. 233, 248-249, the Court said: "It is impossible to concede that by the words 'freedom of the press' the framers of the amendment intended to adopt merely the narrow view then reflected by the law of England that such freedom consisted only in immunity from previous censorship for this abuse had then permanently disappeared from English practice. * * * Undoubtedly, the range of a constitutional provision

Subsequent punishment as, practically, prior restraint

For a long time, much was made of the distinction between a statute calling for "prior restraint" and one providing subsequent criminal punishment; [25] the former alone, [fol. 78] it was once said, raised any question of constituphrased in terms of the common law sometimes may be fixed by recourse to the applicable rules of that law. But the doctrine which justifies such recourse, like other canons of construction, must yield to more compelling reasons whenever they exist. Cf. Continental Illinois Nat. Bank v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 294 U. S. 648, 668-669. And, obviously, it is subject to the qualification that the common law rule invoked shall be one not rejected by our ancestors as unsuited to their civil or political conditions. Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 18 How. 272, 276-277; Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. 441, 454-457; Powell v. Alabama, supra, pp. 60-65. In the light of all that has now been said, it is evident that the restricted rules of the English law in respect of the freedom of the press in force when the Constitution was adopted were never accepted by the American colonists. * * *"

---

[25] Blackstone, most influentially, made this distinction; 4 Blackstone, Commentary, 151-162. His condonation of punishment reflected the views of his patron, Lord Mansfield, who, an opponent of a free press, took an active part in punishing published criticism of the government.

But men like Jefferson and James Wilson abhorred the Tory political views of Blackstone and Mansfield, both of whom had ranked high in the opposition to the American Colonists. Jefferson wrote to Madison of "the horrid Mansfieldism of Blackstone which had caused many young American lawyers to slide into Toryism." Jefferson applauded Tucker's "republicanized" edition of Blackstone published in 1803. See Frank, A Sketch of An Influence, in the volume Interpretations of Modern Legal Philosophers (1947) 189, especially 231; see also 191, 196-198, 205, 207, 210, 215-217. For James Wilson's denunciation of Blackstone's political attitudes, see, e.g., Wilson's opinion in Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 419, 453, 458, 462.

tionality vis-à-vis the First Amendment.[26] Although it may still be true that more is required to justify legislation providing "preventive" than "punitive" censorship,[27] this distinction has been substantially eroded. See, e.g., Dennis v. U. S., 341 U. S. 494; Schenck v. U. S., 249 U. S. 47; DeJonge v. Oregon, 299 U. S. 353; Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U. S. 88, 97-98; Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U. S. 568, 572 note 3. See also Hale, Freedom Through Law (1952) 257-265; Emerson The Doctrine of Prior Restraint, 20 Law & Contemp. Problems (1955) 648 (a thought-stirring discussion of the problem); Kalven, loc. cit. at 8-10, 13. (For further discussion of this theme, see infra.)

The statute, as judicially interpreted, authorizes punishment for inducing mere thoughts, and feelings, or desires

For a time, American courts adopted the test of obscenity contrived in 1868 by Cockburn, L.J., in Queen v. Hicklin, L.R. 3 Q.B. 360: "I think the test of obscenity is this, whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscenity is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences, and into whose hands a publication of this sort might fall." He added that the book there in question "would suggest * * * thoughts of a most impure and libidinous character."

[fol. 79] The test in most federal courts has changed: They do not now speak of the thoughts of "those whose minds are open to * * * immoral influences" but, instead, of the thoughts of average adult normal men and women, determining what these thoughts are, not by proof at the trial, but by the standard of "the average conscience of the time," the current "social sense of what is right." See e.g., U. S. v. Kennerly, 209 F. 119, 121; U. S. v. Levine, 83 F. 2d 156, 157; Parmelee v. U. S., 113 F. 2d 729 (App. D. C.).

---

[26] See Holmes, J. in Patterson v. Colorado, 205 U. S. 454 (1907) citing Blackstone. But compare his subsequent dissenting opinion in Abrams v. U. S., 250 U. S. 616, 624 (1919) which abandons Blackstone's dichotomy.

[27] For these phrases, see Lasswell, Censorship, 3 Ency. of Soc. Sc. (1930) 290, 291.

Yet the courts still define obscenity in terms of the assumed average normal adult reader's sexual thoughts or desires or impulses, without reference to any relation between those "subjective" reactions and his subsequent conduct. The judicial opinions use such key phrases as this: "suggesting lewd thoughts and exciting sensual desires";[28] "arouse the salacity of the reader,"[29] "allowing or implanting * * * obscene, lewd or lascivious thoughts or desires,"[30] "arouse sexual desires."[30a] The judge's charge in the instant case reads accordingly: "It must tend to stir sexual impulses and lead to sexually impure thoughts." Thus the statute, as the courts construe it, appears to provide criminal punishment for inducing no more than thoughts, feelings, desires.

No adequate knowledge is available concerning the effects on the conduct of normal adults of reading or seeing the "obscene."

Suppose we assume, arguendo, that sexual thoughts or feelings stirred by the "obscene," probably will often issue [fol. 80] into overt conduct. Still it does not at all follow that that conduct will be anti-social. For no sane person can believe it socially harmful if sexual desires lead to normal sexual behavior since without such behavior the human race would soon disappear.[31]

Doubtless, Congress could validly provide punishment for mailing any publications if there were some moderately substantial reliable data showing that reading or seeing

---

[28] U. S. v. Dennett, 39 F. 2d 564, 568 (C. A. 2).

[29] U. S. v. Levine, 83 F. 2d 156, 158 (C. A. 2).

[30] Burstein v. U. S., 178 F. 2d 665, 667 (C. A. 9).

[30a] American Civil Liberties Union v. Chicago, 3 Ill. (2d) 334, 121 N. E. (2d) 585.

[31] Cf. the opinion of Mr. Justice Codd in Integrated Press v. The Postmaster General, as reported in Herbert, Codd's Last Case (1952) 14, 16: "Nor is the Court much impressed by the contention that the frequent contemplation of young ladies in bathing dresses must tend to the moral corruption of the community. On the contrary, these ubiquitous exhibitions have so diminished what was left of the those publications probably conduces to seriously harmful sexual conduct on the part of normal adult human beings. But we have no such data.

Suppose it argued that whatever excites sexual longings might possibly produce sexual misconduct. That cannot suffice: Notoriously, perfumes sometimes act as aphrodisiacs, yet one will suggest that therefore Congress may constitutionally legislate punishment for mailing perfumes. In truth, the stimuli to irregular sexual conduct, by normal men and woman, may be almost anything—the odor of carnations or cheese, the sight of a cane or a candle or a shoe, the touch of silk or a gunny-sack. For all anyone now knows, stimuli of that sort may be far more provocative of such misconduct than reading obscene books or seeing obscene pictures. Said John Milton, "Evil manners are as perfectly learnt, without books, a thousand other ways that cannot be stopped."

[fol. 81] Effect of "obscenity" on adult conduct

To date there exists, I think, no thorough-going studies by competent persons which justifies the conclusion that normal adults' reading or seeing of the "obscene" probably induces anti-social conduct. Such studies do conclude that so complex and numerous are the causes of sexual vice that it is impossible to assert with any assurance that "obscenity" represents a ponderable causal factor in sexually deviant adult behavior. "Although the whole subject of obscenity censorship hinges upon the unproved assumption that 'obscene' literature is a significant factor in causing sexual deviation from the community standard, no report can be found of a single effort at genuine research to test this assumption by singling out as a factor for study the effect mystery of womanhood that they might easily be condemned upon another ground of public policy, in that they tended to destroy the natural fascination of the female, so that the attention of the male population was diverted from thoughts of marriage to cricket, darts, motor-bicycling and other occupations which do nothing to arrest the decline of the population."

---

of sex literature upon sexual behavior." [32] What little competent research has been done, points definitely in a direction precisely opposite to that assumption.

Alpert reports [33] that, when, in the 1920s, 409 women college graduates were asked to state in writing what things stimulated them sexually, they answered thus: 218 said "Man"; 95 said books; 40 said drama; 29 said dancing; 18 said pictures; 9 said music. Of those who replied "that the source of their sex information came from books, not one specified a 'dirty' book as the source. Instead, the books listed were: The Bible, the dictionary, the encyclopedia, novels from Dickens to Henry James, circulars about venereal diseases, medical books, and Motley's Rise of the Dutch Republic." Macaulay, replying to advocates of the suppression of obscene books, said: "We find it difficult to believe that in a world so full of temptations as this, any [fol. 82] gentleman whose life would have been virtuous if he had not read Aristophanes or Juvenal, will be vicious by reading them." Echoing Macaulay, "Jimmy" Walker remarked that he had never heard of a woman seduced by a book. New Mexico has never had an obscenity statute; there is no evidence that, in that state, sexual misconduct is proportionately greater than elsewhere.

Effect on conduct of young people

Most federal courts (as above noted) now hold that the test of obscenity is the effect on the "mind" of the average normal adult, that effect being determined by the "average conscience of the time," the current "sense of what is right"; and that the statute does not intend "to reduce our treatment of sex to the standard of a child's library in the supposed interest of a salacious few"; U. S. v. Kennerley, 209 F. 120, 121.

However, there is much pressure for legislation, designed to prevent juvenile delinquency, which will single out children, i e, will prohibit the sale to young persons of "ob-

---

[32] Lockhart and McClure, Obscenity and The Courts, 20 L. & Contemp. P. (1955) 587, 595.

[33] See Alpert, Judicial Censorship and The Press, 52 Harv. L. Rev. (1938) 40, 72.

scenity'' or other designated matter. That problem does not present itself here, since the federal statute is not thus limited. The trial judge in his charge in the instant case told the jury that the ''test'' under that statute is not the effect of the mailed mater on ''those comprising a particular segment of the community, the ''young'' or ''the immature''; and see U. S. v. Levine, 83 F. 2d 156, 157 (C. A. 2).

Therefore a discussion of such a children's protective statute is irrelevant here. But, since Judge Clark does discuss the alleged linkage of obscenity to juvenile delinquency, and since it may perhaps be thought that it has some bearing on the question of the effect of obscenity on adult conduct, I too shall discuss it.

[fol. 83] The following is a recent summary of studies of that subject: ''(1) Scientific[33a] studies of juvenile delinquency demonstrate that those who get into trouble, and are the greatest concern of the advocates of censorship, are far less inclined to read than those who do not become delinquent. The delinquents are generally the adventurous type, who have little use for reading and other nonactive entertainment. Thus, even assuming that reading sometimes has an adverse effect upon moral behavior, the effect is not likely to be substantial, for those who are susceptible seldom read. (2) Sheldon and Eleanor Glueck, who are among the country's leading authorities on the treatment and causes of juvenile delinquency, have recently published the results of a ten-year study of its causes. They exhaustively studied approximately 90 factors and influences that might lead to or explain juvenile delinquency; but the Gluecks gave no consideration to the type of reading material, if any were read by the delinquents. This is, of course, consistent with their finding that delinquents read very little. When those who know so much about the problem of delinquency among youth—the very group about whom the advocates of censorship are most concerned —conclude that what delinquents read has so little effect upon their conduct that it is not worth investigating in an exhaustive study of causes, there is good reason for serious doubts concerning the basic hypothesis on which obscenity censorship is dependent. (3) The many other influences in society that stimulate sexual desire are so much more frequent in their influence and so much more potent in their effect that the influence of reading is likely, at most, to be relatively insignificant in the composite of forces that lead an individual into conduct deviating from the [fol. 84] community sex standards. * * * And the studies demonstrating that sex knowledge seldom results from reading indicates the relative unimportance of literature in sexual thoughts and behavior as compared with other factors in society." [34]

---

[33a] I, for one, deplore the use of the word ''scientific'' as applied to social studies. See, e.g., Frank, 4 J. of Public Law (1955) 8.

---

[34] Novick, Superintendent of the New York Training School for Girls, writes: "In the public eye today juvenile delinquency is alternately the direct result of progressive education, horror comics, T. V. programs, and other pet peeves of our present society * * * This is not a new phenomenon. Each generation of adults has been concerned about the behavior of its children and has looked for a scapegoat on which to place the blame for its delinquency. At the same time, adults have always sought a panacea which would cure the problem. It is sufficient to note that delinquency has always risen during periods of stress and strain, and the era in which we are living is no exception * * * Neither do restrictive measures such as * * * censorship of reading matter * * * prevent delinquency. They merely have an effect upon the manner in which the delinquency will be expressed." Novick, Integrating the Delinquent and His Community, 20 Fed. Probation, 38, 40 (1956).

Charles Lamb (whose concern with children he manifested in his Tales From Shakespeare) had no belief that uncensored reading harmed children: In his Essays of Elia he wrote of the education of his cousin Bridget, "She was tumbled early into a spacious closet of good old English reading" (which included Elizabethen and Restoration dramas and 18th century novels) "without much selection or prohibition and browsed at will upon that fair and whole-[fol. 85] Judge Clark, however, speaks of "the strongly held views of those with competence in the premises as to the very direct connection" of obscenity "with the development of juvenile delinquency." In support of this statement, he cites and quotes from a recent opinion of the New York Court of Appeals and an article by Judge Vanderbilt, which in turn, cite the writings of persons thus described by Judge Clark as "those with competence in the premises." One of the cited writings is a report, by Dr. Jahoda and associates, entitled The Impact of Literature:

---

some pasturage. Had I twenty girls, they should be brought up exactly in this fashion."

Judge Curtis Bok, perhaps remembering Lamb's remarks, said of the publications before him in Commonwealth v. Gordon, 66 P. & D. 101 (1949): "It will be asked whether one would care to have one's young daughter read these books. I suppose that by the time she is old enough to wish to read them she will have learned the biologic facts of life and the words that go with them. There is something seriously wrong at home if those facts have not been met and faced and sorted by then; it is not children so much as parents that should receive our concern about this. I should prefer that my own three daughters meet the facts of life and the literature of the world in my library than behind a neighbor's barn, for I can face the adversary there directly. If the young ladies are appalled by what they read, they can close the book at the bottom of page one; if they read further, they will learn what is in the world and in its people, and no parents who have been discerning with their children need fear the outcome. Nor can they hold it back, for life is a series of little battles and minor issues, and the burden of choice is on us all, every day, young and old. Our daughters must live in the world and decide what sort of women they are to be, and we should be willing to prefer their deliberate and informed choice of decency rather than an innocence that continues to spring from ignorance. If that choice be made in the open sunlight, it is more apt than when made in shadow to fall on the side of honorable behavior."

Watson writes similarly: "What innocent children most need is not a sterile environment from which all evidence of

A Psychological Discussion of Some Assumptions in the Censorship Debate (1954).[35] I have read this report (which is a careful survey of all available studies and psychological theories). I think it expresses an attitude quite contrary to that indicated by Judge Clark. In order to avoid any possible bias in my interpretation of that report, I thought it [fol. 86] well to ask Dr. Jahoda to write her own summary of it, which, with her permission, I shall quote. (In doing so, I am following the example of Mr. Justice Jackson who, in Fed. Trade Commission v. Ruberoid, 343 U. S. 470, 485, acknowledged that he relied on "an unpublished treatise," i.e., one not available to the parties. If that practice is proper, I think it similarly proper to quote the author's unpublished interpretation of a published treatise.) Dr. Jahoda's summary reads as follows:

"Persons who argue for increased censorship of printed matter often operate on the assumption that reading about sexual matters or about violence and brutality leads to antisocial actions, particularly to juvenile delinquency. An * * * lust * * * has been removed, but help in interpreting the evil which is an inescapable part of life. Home, school and church should cooperate not to create an artificial hothouse insulation for life's realities but to enable children to respond, "Ah, yes: I understand!" Most children in middle class homes alarm their parents by spells in which they overdo imaginative violence, sex talk, worry about death, listening to cowboy programs, reading inane comics, exchanging dirty stories, and most of them in time, with or without adult counsel, will work their way through to better standards of taste. Protection by censorship might leave such children weaker and more susceptible; some of these childhood interests, like measles, contribute to a later life of useful immunity." Watson, Some Effects on Censorship upon Society, in 5 Social Meaning of Legal Concepts (1953) 73, 83-85.

---

Said Milton: "They are not skilful considerers of human things, who imagine to remove sin by removing the matter of sin." A renowned sinner declared that he "could resist everything but temptation."

[35] Cited in a passage in Brown v. Kingsley Books, Inc., 1 N. Y. (2d) 639, quoted by Judge Clark.

examination of the pertinent psychological literature has led to the following conclusions:

"1. There exists no research evidence either to prove or to disprove this assumption definitively.

"2. In the absence of scientific proof two lines of psychological approach to the examination of the assumption are possible: (a) a review of what is known on the causes of juvenile delinquency; and (b) review of what is known about the effect of literature on the mind of the reader.

"3. In the vast research literature on the causes of juvenile delinquency there is no evidence to justify the assumption that reading about sexual matters or about violence leads to delinquent acts. Experts on juvenile delinquency agree that it has no single cause. Most of them regard early childhood events, which precede the reading age, as a necessary condition for later delinquency. At a later age, the nature of personal relations is assumed to have much greater power in determining a delinquent career than the vicarious experiences provided by reading matter. [fol. 87] Juvenile delinquents as a group read less, and less easily, than non-delinquents. Individual instances are reported in which so-called 'good' books allegedly influenced a delinquent in the manner in which 'bad' books are assumed to influence him.

"Where childhood experiences and subsequent events have combined to make delinquency psychologically likely, reading could have one of two effects: it could serve a trigger function releasing the criminal act or it could provide for a substitute outlet of aggression in fantasy, dispensing with the need for criminal action. There is no empirical evidence in either direction.

"4. With regard to the impact of literature on the mind of the reader, it must be pointed out that there is a vast overlap in content between all media of mass communication. The daily press, television, radio, movies, books and comics all present their share of so-called 'bad' material, some with great realism as reports of actual events, some in clearly fictionalized form. It is virtually impossible to isolate the impact of one of these media on a poppulation exposed to all of them. Some evidence suggests that the particular communications which arrest the attention of an individual are in good part a matter of choice. As a rule, people do not expose themselves to everything that is offered, but only to what agrees with their inclinations.

"Children, who have often not yet crystallized their preferences and have more unspecific curiosity than many adults, are therefore perhaps more open to accidental influences from literature. This may present a danger to youngsters who are insecure or maladjusted who find in reading (of 'bad' books as well as of 'good' books) an escape from reality which they do not dare face. Needs which are not met in the real world are gratified in a fantasy world. It is likely, though not fully demonstrated, that excessive reading of comic books will intensify in [fol. 88] children those qualities which drove them to the comic book world to begin with: an inability to face the world, apathy, a belief that the individual is hopelessly impotent and driven by uncontrollable forces and, hence, an acceptance of violence and brutality in the real world.

"It should be noted that insofar as causal sequence is implied, insecurity and maladjustment in a child must precede this exposure to the written word in order to lead to these potential effects. Unfortunately, perhaps, the reading of Shakespeare's tragedies or of Anderson's and Grimm's fairy tales might do much the same."

Most of the current discussion of the relation between children's reading and juvenile delinquency has to do with so-called "comic books" which center on violence (sometimes coupled with sex) rather than mere obscenity. Judge Vanderbilt, in an article from which Judge Clark quotes, cites Feder, Comic Book Regulation (University of California, Bureau of Public Administration, 1955 Legislative Problems No. 2).[36] Feder writes: "It has never been determined definitely whether or not comics portraying violence, crime and horror are a cause of juvenile delinquency."

Judge Vanderbilt, in the article from which Judge Clark quotes, also cites Wertham, Seduction of the Innocent (1954).[37] Dr. Wertham is the foremost proponent of the view that "comic books" do contribute to juvenile delinquency. The Jahoda Report takes issue with Dr. Wertham, who relies much on a variety of the post-hoc-ergo-propter-hoc variety of argument, i.e., youths who had read "comic books" became delinquents. The argument, at best, proves too much: Dr. Wertham points to the millions of young readers of such books; but only a fraction of these readers become delinquents. Many of the latter also chew gum, [fol. 89] drink coca-cola, and wear soft-soled shoes. Moreover, Dr. Wertham specifically says (p. 298) that he is little concerned with allegedly obscene publications designed for reading by adults, and (pp. 303, 316, 348) that the legislation which he advocates would do no more than forbid the sale or display of "comic books" to minors. Since, as previously noted, the federal obscenity statute is not so restricted, even Dr. Wertham's book does not support Judge Clark's position.

---

[36] Vanderbilt, Impasse In Justice, Wash. U.L.Q. (1956), 267, 302.

[37] Ibid.

Maybe some day we will have enough reliable data to show that obscene books and pictures do tend to influence children's sexual conduct adversely. Then a federal statute could be enacted which would avoid constitutional defects by authorizing punishment for using the mails or interstate shipments in the sale of such books and pictures to children.[38]

It is, however, not at all clear that children would be ignorant, in any considerable measure, of obscenity, if no obscene publications ever came into their hands. Youngsters get a vast deal of education in sexual smut from companions of their own age.[39] A verbatim report of conversa-

---

[38] Such a statute was long ago suggested. See Ernst and Seagle, To the Pure (1928) 277.

[39] Cf. U. S. v. Dennett, 9 F. 2d 564, 568 (C. A. 2).

Alpert (loc. cit. at 74) writes of the American Youth Commission study of the conditions and attitudes of young people in Maryland between the ages of sixteen and twenty-four, as reported in 1938: "For this study Maryland was deliberately picked as a 'typical' state, and, according to the Commission, the 13,528 young people personaly interviewed in Maryland can speak for the two hundred and fifty thousand young people in Maryland and the twenty tions among young teen-age boys (from average respectable [fol. 90] homes) will disclose their amazing proficiency in obscene language, learned from other boys.[40] Replying to the argument of the need for censorship to protect the young, Milton said: "Who shall regulate all the * * * conversation of our youth * * * appoint what shall be discussed * * * *" Most judges who reject that view are long past their youth and have probably forgotten the conversational ways of that period of life: "I remember when I was a little boy," said Mr. Dooley, "but I don't remember how I was a little boy."

---

millions in the United States. 'The chief source of sex "education" for the youth of all ages and all religious groups was found to be the youth's contemporaries.' Sixty-six percent of the boys and forty percent of the girls reported that what they knew about sex was more or less limited to what their friends of their own age had told them. After 'contemporaries' and the youth's home, the source that is next in importance is the school, from which about 8 percent of the young people reported they had received most of their sex information. A few, about 4 percent, reported they owed most to books, while less than 1 percent asserted that they had acquired most of their information from movies. Exactly the same proportion specified the church as the chief source of their sex information. These statistical results are not offered as conclusive; but that they do more than cast doubt upon the assertion that 'immoral' books, corrupt and deprave must be admitted. These statistical results placed in the scale against the weight of the dogma upon which the law is founded lift the counterpane high. Add this: that 'evil manners' are as easily acquired without books as with books; that crowded slums, machine labor, barren lives, starved emotions, and unreasoning minds are far more dangerous to morals than any so-called obscene literature. True, this attack is tangential, but a social problem is here involved, and the weight of this approach should be felt." Id. at 74.

---

[40] For such a report, slightly expurgated for adult readers, see Cleckley, The Mask of Sanity (1950) 135-137.

The obscenity statute and the reputable press.

Let it be assumed, for the sake of the argument, that contemplation of published matter dealing with sex has a significant impact on children's conduct. On that assumption, we cannot overlook the fact that our most reputable newspapers and periodicals carry advertisements and photographs displaying women in what decidedly are sexually alluring postures,[41] and at times emphasizing the [fol. 91] importance of "sex appeal." That women are there shown scantily clad, increases "the mystery and allure of the bodies that are hidden," writes an eminent psychiatrist. "A leg covered by a silk stocking is much more attractive than a naked one; a bosom pushed into shape by a brassiere is more alluring than the pendant realities."[42] Either, then, the statute, must be sternly applied to prevent the mailing of many reputable newspapers and periodicals containing such ads and photographs, or else we must acknowledge that they have created a cultural atmosphere for children in which, at a maximum, only the most trifling additional effect can be imputed to children's perusal of the kind of matter mailed by the defendant.

The obscenity statute and the newspapers

Because of the contrary views of many competent persons, one may well be sceptical about Dr. Wertham's thesis. However, let us see what, logically, his crusade would do the daily press: After referring repeatedly to the descriptions, in "comic books" and other "mass media," of violence combined with sadistic sexual behavior, descriptions

---

[41] Cf. Larrabee, The Cultural Context of Sex Censorship, 20 L. & Contemp. Prob. (1955) 672, 684.

[42] Myerson, Speaking of Man (1950) 92. See also the well known chapter on clothes in Anatole France's Penguin Island.

Dr. Wertham discussing "comic books," makes much of the advertisements they carry. He speaks of their "breast ads," and also of their playing up of "glamour girls," their stress on the "sexy," their emphasis on women's "secondary sexual characteristics." Is not this also descriptive of the advertisements in our "best periodicals"?

which he says contribute to juvenile delinquency, he writes, "Juvenile delinquency reflects the social values current in a society. Both adults and children absorb these social values in their daily lives, * * * and also in all the communications through the mass media * * * Juvenile delinquency holds up a mirror to society * * * It is self-understood that such a pattern in a mass medium does not come from nothing * * * Comic books are not the disease, they [fol. 92] are only a symptom * * * The same social forces that made comic books make other social evils, and the same social forces that keep comic crime books keep the other social evils the way they are." (Emphasis added.)

Now the daily newspapers, especially those with immense circulations, constitute an important part of the "mass media"; and each copy of a newspaper sells for much less than a "comic book." Virtually all the descriptions, of sex mingled with violence, which Dr. Wertham finds in the "comic books," can be found, often accompanied by gruesome photographs, in those daily journals. Even a newspaper which is considered unusually respectable, published prominently on its first page, on August 26, 1956, a true story of a "badly decomposed body" of a 24 year old woman school teacher, found in a clump of trees. The story reported that police had quoted a 29 year old salesman as saying that "he drove to the area" with the school teacher, that "the two had relations on the ground, and later got into an argument," after which he "struck her three times on the back of the head with a rock, and, leaving her there, drove away." One may suspect that such stories of sex and violence in the daily press have more impact on young readers than do those in the "comic books," since the daily press reports reality while the "comic books" largely confine themselves to avowed fiction or fantasy. Yet Dr. Wertham, and most others who propose legislation to curb the sale of "comic books" to children, propose that it should not extend to newspapers.[42a] Why not?

[42a] "No one would dare ask of a newspaper that it observe the same restraints that are constantly being demanded of * * * the comic book." Larrabee, The Cultural Context of Sex Censorship, 20 Law and Contemp. Problems (1955) 673, 679.

The question is relevant in reference to the application of the obscenity statute: Are our prosecutors ready to [fol. 93] prosecute reputable newspaper publishers under that Act? I think not. I do not at all urge such prosecutions. I do suggest that the invalidity of that statute has not been vigorously challenged because it has not been applied to important persons like those publishers but, instead, has been enforced principally against relatively inconspicuous men like the defendant here.

Da Capo: Available data seem wholly insufficient to show that the obscenity statutes comes within any exception to the First Amendment.

I repeat that, because that statute is not restricted to obscene publications mailed for sale to minors, its validity should be tested in terms of the evil effects of adult reading of obscenity on adult conduct.[43] With the present lack of evidence that publications probably have such effects, how can the government demonstrate sufficiently that the statute is within the narrow exceptions to the scope of the First Amendment? One would think that the mere possibility of a causal relation to misconduct ought surely not be enough.

Even if Congress had made an express legislative finding of the probable evil influence, on adult conduct of adult reading or seeing obscene publications, the courts would not be bound by that finding, if it were not justified in fact. See, e.g., Chastleton Corp. v. Sinclair, 264 U. S. 543, where the Court (per Holmes, J.) said a statute (declaring the existence of an emergency) that "a Court is not at liberty to shut its eyes to an obvious mistake, when the validity of the law depends upon the truth of what is declared." And the Court there and elsewhere has held that the judiciary may use judicial notice in ascertaining the truth of such legislative declaration.[44]

---

[43] See U. S. v. Levine, 83 F. 2d 156, 157 (C. A. 2) to the effect that "what counts is its effect, not upon any particular class, but upon all those whom it is likely to reach."

[44] Cf. United States v. Rumely, 345 U. S. 41, 44.

[fol. 94] If the obscenity statute is valid, why may Congress not validly provide punishment for mailing books which will provoke thoughts it considers undesirable about religion or politics?

If the statute is valid, then, considering the foregoing, it would seem that its validity must rest on this ground: Congress, by statute, may constitutionally provide punishment for the mailing of books evoking mere thoughts or feelings about sex, if Congress considers them socially dangerous, even in the absence of any satisfactory evidence that those thoughts or feelings will tend to bring about socially harmful deeds. If that be correct, it is hard to understand why, similarly, Congress may not constitutionally provide punishment for such distribution of books evoking mere thoughts or feelings, about religion or politics, which Congress considers socially dangerous, even in the absence of any satisfactory evidence that those thoughts or feelings will tend to bring about socially dangerous deeds.

2. The Judicial exception of the "classics"

As I have said, I have no doubt the jury could reasonably find, beyond a reasonable doubt, that many of the publications mailed by defendant were obscene within the current judicial definition of the term as explained by the trial judge in his charge to the jury. But so, too, are a multitude of recognized works of art found in public libraries. Compare, for instance, the books which are exhibits in this case with Montaigne's Essay on Some Lines of Virgil or with Chaucer. Or consider the many nude pictures which the defendant transmitted through the mails, and then turn to the reproductions in the articles on painting and sculpture in the Encyclopedia Britannica (14th edition):[45] Some of

[45] See, e.g., Vol. 17, p. 36, Plate 3, No. 4, reproducing Botticelli's "Birth of Venus"; p. 38, Plate VIII, No. 2, reproducing Titian's "Woman on a Couch"; Vol. 20, p. 202, Plate V, No. 8, reproducing Clodion's "Nymph and Satyr"; p. 204, Plate VI, reproducing Rodin's "The Kiss."

See Parmelee v. U. S., 113 F. 2d 729, 734 and note 19 (App. D. C.).

[fol. 95] the latter are indistinguishably "obscene." Yet these Encyclopedia volumes are readily accessible to everyone, young or old, and, without let or hindrance, are frequently mailed to all parts of the country. Catalogues, of famous are museums, almost equally accessible and also often mailed, contain reproductions of paintings and sculpture, by great masters, no less "obscene."[46]

To the argument that such books (and such reproductions of famous paintings and works of sculpture) fall within the statutory ban, the courts have answered that they are "classics,"—books of "literary distinction" or works which have "an accepted place in the arts," including, so this court has held, Ovid's Art of Love and Boccacio's Decameron.[47] There is a "curious dilemma" involved in this answer that the statute condemns "only books which are dull and without merit," that in no event will the statute be applied to the "classics," i.e., books "of literary distinction."[48] The courts have not explained how they escape that dilemma, but instead seem to have gone to sleep (although rather uncomfortably) on its horns.

This dilemma would seem to show up the basic constitutional flaw in the statute: No one can reconcile the cur-[fol. 96] rently accepted test of obscenity with the immunity of such "classics" as e.g., Aristophanes' Lysistratra, Chaucer's, Canterbury Tales, Rabelais', Gargantua and Pantagruel, Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis, Fielding's,

---

[46] See, e.g., Masterpieces of Painting From The National Gallery of Art (Cairns and Walker ed. 144) 68, 72, 114; Catalogue of Pictures Collected by Yale Alumni (1956) 3, 15, 55, 134, 137, 195.

[47] See, e.g., U. S. v. Levine, 83 F. 2d 156, 157 (C. A. 2); U. S. v. One Book Entitled Ulysses, 72 F. 2d 705 (C. A. 2); Roth v. Goldman, 172 F. 2d 788 (C. A. 2).

[48] See Roth v. Goldman, 172 F. 2d 788 (C. A. 2).

No one can argue with a straight face (1) that reading an obscene "classic" in a library has less harmful effects or (2) that, as the "classics" often are published in expensive volumes, they usually affect only persons who have large incomes, and that such persons' right to read is peculiarly privileged.

Tom Jones, or Balzac's Droll Stories. For such "obscene" writings, just because of their great artistry and charm, will presumably have far greater influence on readers than dull inartistic writings.

It will not do to differentiate a "classic," published in the past, on the ground that it comported with the average moral attitudes at the time and place of its original publication. Often this was not true. It was not true, for instance, of Balzac's Droll Stories,[49] a "classic" now freely circulated by many public libraries, and which therefore must have been transported by mail (or in interstate commerce). More to the point, if the issue is whether a book meets the American common conscience of the present time, the question is how "average" Americans now regard the book, not how it was regarded when first published, here or abroad. Why should the age of an "obscene" book be relevant? After how many years—25 or 50 or 100—does such a writing qualify as a "classic"?

The truth is that the courts have excepted the "classics" from the federal obscenity statute, since otherwise most Americans would be deprived of access to many masterpieces of literature and the pictorial arts, and a statute yielding such deprivation would not only be laughably absurd but would squarely oppose the intention of the cultivated men who framed and adopted the First Amendment.

This exception—nowhere to be found in the statute [50]—is a judge-made device invented to avoid that absurdity. The [fol. 97] fact that the judges have felt the necessity of seeking that avoidance, serves to suggest forcibly that the statute, in its attempt to control what our citizens may read and see, violates the First Amendment. For no one can rationally justify the judge-made exception. The contention would scarcely pass as rational that the "classics" will be [49] See discussion in Roth v. Goldman, 172 F. 2d at 797 (C. A. 2).

[50] The importation statute relating to obscenity, 19 U. S. C. 1305, does make an explicit exception of the "so-called classics or books of recognized and established literary * * * merit," but only if they are "imported for non-commercial purposes"; if so, the Secretary of the Treasury has discretion to admit them.

read or seen solely by an intellectual or artistic elite; for, even ignoring the snobbish, undemocratic, nature of this contention, there is no evidence that that elite has a moral fortitude (an immunity from moral corruption) superior to that of the "masses." And if the exception, to make it rational, were taken as meaning that a contemporary book is exempt if it equates in "literary distinction" with the "classics," the result would be amazing: Judges would have to serve as literary critics; jurisprudence would merge with aesthetics; authors and publishers would consult the legal digests for legal-artistic precedents; we would some day have a Legal Restatement of the Canons of Literary Taste.

The exception of the "classics" is therefore irrational. Consequently, it would seem that we should interpret the statute rationally—i.e., without that exception. If, however, the exception, as an exception, is irrational, then it would appear that, to render the statute valid, the standard applied to the "classics" should be applied to all books and pictures. The result would be that, in order to be constitutional, the statute must be wholly inefficacious.

3. How censorship under the statute actually operates (a) Prosecutors, as censors, actually exercise prior restraint.

Fear of punishment serves as a powerful restraint on publication, and fear of punishment often means, practically [fol. 98]fear of prosecution. For most men dread indictment and prosecution; the publicity alone terrifies, and to defend a criminal action is expensive. If the definition of obscenity had a limited and fairly well known scope, that fear might deter restricted sorts of publications only. But on account of the extremely vague judicial definition of the obscene,[51] a person threatened with prosecution if he mails (or otherwise sends in interstate commerce)[52] almost any book which [51] See infra for further discussion of that vagueness.

---

[52] As to interstate transportation, see 18 U. S. C. Section 1462 which contains substantially the same provisions as 18 U. S. C. Section 1461.

deals in an unconventional, unorthodox, manner with sex,[53] may well apprehend that, should the threat be carried out, he will be punished. As a result, each prosecutor become a literary censor (i.e., dictator) with immense unbridled power, a virtually uncontrolled discretion.[54] A statute would

---

[53] See Kaplan, Obscenity as An Esthetic Category, 20 Law & Contemp. Problems (1955) 544, 551-552 as to "conventional obscenity," which he defines as "the quality of any work which attacks sexual patterns and practices. In essence, it is the presentation of a sexual heterodoxy, a rejection of accepted standards of sexual behavior. Zola, Ibsen and Shaw provide familiar examples. It surprises no one that the author of Nana also wrote J'Accuse; of Ghosts, An Enemy of the People; of Mrs. Warren's Profession, Saint Joan."

See also, Lockhart and McClure, Obscenity in the Courts, 20 Law & Contemp. Problems (1955) 586, 596-597 as to "ideological obscenity"; they note that the courts have generally refrained (at least explicitly) from basing their decisions on rulings that literally may be prescribed to guard against a change in accepted moral standards, "because any such ruling would fly squarely in the fact of the very purpose for guaranteeing freedom of expression and would thus raise serious constitutional questions."

[54] One court, at the suit of a publisher, enjoined a Chief of police—who went beyond threat of prosecution and ordered booksellers not to sell certain books—on the ground that the officer had exceeded his powers; New American Library v. Allan, 114 F. Supp. 823 (Ohio, D. C.). In another similar case, where a prosecutor was enjoined, the injunction order was much modified on appeal; Bantam Book v. Melko, 96 A. (2d) 47, modified 103 A. (2d) 256.

If, however, the prosecutor confines himself to a mere threat of prosecution, the traditional reluctance to restrain criminal prosecutions will very probably make it difficult to obtain such an injunction. Sunshine Book Co. v. McCaffrey, 112 N. Y. S. (2d) 476; see also 22 U. of Chicago L. Rev. (1954) 216; 68 Harv. L. Rev. (1955) 489.

This may be particularly true with respect to a federal prosecutor. See Jackson, The Federal Prosecutor, 24 J. of [fol. 98a] be invalid which gave the Postmaster General the power, without reference to any standard, to close the mails to any publication he happened to dislike.[55] Yet, a federal prosecutor, under the federal obscenity statute, approximates that position: Within wide limits, he can (on the advice of the Postmaster General or on no one's advice) exercise such a censorship by threat, without a trial, without any judicial supervision, capriciously and arbitrary. Having no special qualifications for that task, nevertheless, he can, in large measure, determine at his will what those within his district may not read on sexual subjects.[56] In that way,

---

Am. Jud. Soc. (1940) 18: "The (federal) prosecutor has more control over life, liberty, and reputation than any other person in America. His discretion is tremendous. He can have citizens investigated and, if he is that kind of person, he can have this done to the tune of public statements and veiled or unveiled intimations. Or the prosecutor may choose a more subtle course and simply have a citizen's friends interviewed. The proscutor can order arrests, present cases to the grand jury in secret session, and on the basis of his one-sided presentation of the facts, can cause the citizen to be indicted and held for trial. He may dismiss the case before trial, in which case the defense never has a chance to be heard."

[55] See, e.g., Joseph Burstyn Co. Inc. v. Wilson, 343 U. S. 495.

[56] It is, therefore, doubtful whether, as suggested by Emerson (loc. cit. at 656-660), a statute calling for punishment involves very much less arbitrary conduct and very much less censorship than one calling for punishment. In actual fact, by his threats of prosecution, the prosecutor does exercise prior restraint. Much, therefore, that Emerson says of prior restraint authorized by statute applies as well to censorship through a prosecutor's threats of prosecution: The "procedural safeguards built around criminal prosecution" (the stronger burden of proof, the stricter rules of evidence, the tighter procedure) are likewise absent. The "decision rests with a single functionary," an executive official, rather than with the courts. The prosecutor, by threats of prosecution, accomplishes prior restraint "behind a screen of informality and partial concealment that

[fol. 99] the statute brings about an actual prior restraint of free speech and free press which strikingly flouts the First Amendment.[57]

(b) Judges as censors.

When a prosecution is instituted and a trial begins, much censorship power passes to the trial judge: If he sits without a jury, he must decide whether a book is obscene. If the trial is by jury, then, if he thinks the book plainly not obscene, he directs a verdict for the accused or, after a verdict of guilt, enters a judgment of acquittal. How does the judge determine whether a book is obscene? Not by way of evidence introduced at the trial, but by way of some sort of judicial notice. Whence come the judicial notice data to inform him?

Those whose views most judges know best are other lawyers. Judges can and should take judicial notice that, at many gatherings of lawyers at Bar Association or of alumni of our leading law schools,[58] tales are told fully as seriously curtails opportunity for public appraisal'' and entailing the ''chance of discrimination and other abuse.'' The ''policies and actions'' of the prosecutor, in his censorship by threats of prosecution, are not ''likely to be known or publicly debated; material and study and criticism'' are not ''readily available.''

---

[57] For startling instances of ''prosecutor censorship'' see Blanshard, The Right to Read (1955) 184-186, 190; 22 U. of Chicago L. Rev. (1954) 216.

[58] See Roth v. Goldman, 172 F. 2d 788 at 796 (concurring opinion):

''One thinks of the lyrics sung at many such gatherings by a certain respected and conservative member of the faculty of a great law-school which considers itself the most distinguished and which is the Alma Mater of many judges sitting on upper courts.''

Aubrey's Lives, containing many ''salacious'' tales, delights some of our greatest judges.

Mr. Justice Holmes was a constant reader of ''naughty French novels.'' See Bent, Justice W. O. Holmes (1932) 16, 134.

"obscene" as many of those distributed by men, like defendant, convicted for violation of the obscenity statute. Should not judges, then, set aside such convictions? If they [fol. 100] do not, are they not somewhat arrogantly concluding that lawyers are an exempt elite, unharmed by what will harm the multitude of other Americans? If lawyers are not such an elite then, since, in spite of the "obscene" tales lawyers frequently tell one another, data are lacking that lawyers as a group become singularly unusually addicted to depraved sexual conduct, should not judges conclude that "obscenity" does not importantly contribute to such misconduct, and that therefore the statute is unconstitutional?

(c) Jurors as Censors.

If, in a jury case, the trial judge does not direct a verdict or enter a judgment of acquittal, the jury exercises the censorship power. Courts have said that a jury has a peculiar aptitude as a censor of obscenity, since, representing a cross-section of the community, it knows peculiarly well the average "common conscience" of the time. Yet no statistician would conceivably accept the views of a jury—twelve persons chosen at random—as a fair sample of community attitudes on such a subject as obscenity. A particular jury may voice the "moral sentiments" of a generation ago, not of the present time.

Each jury verdict in an obscenity case has been sagaciously called "really a small bit of legislation ad hoc."[59] So each jury constitutes a tiny autonomous legislature. Any one such tiny legislature, as experience teaches, may well differ from any other, in thus legislating as to obscenity. And, one may ask, was it the purpose of the First Amendment, to authorize hundreds of divers jury-legislatures, with discrepant beliefs, to decide whether or not to exact hundreds of divers statutes interfering with freedom of expression? (I shall note, infra, the vast difference be- [fol. 101] tween the applications by juries of the "reasonable man" standard and the "obscenity" standard.)

---

[59] U. S. v. Levine, 83 F. 2d 156, 157 (C. A. 2).

4. The dangerously infectious nature of governmental censorship of books

Governmental control of ideas or personal preferences is alien in a democracy. And the yearning to use governmental censorship of any kind is infectious. It may spread insidiously. Commencing with suppression of books as obscene, it is not unlikely to develop into official lust for the power of thought-control in the areas of religion, politics, and elsewhere. Milton observed that "licensing of books * * * necessarily pulls along with it so many other kinds of licensing." J. S. Mill noted that the "bounds of what may be called moral police" may easily extend "until it encroaches on the most unquestionably legitimate liberty of the individual." We should beware of a recrudescence of the undemocratic doctrine uttered in the 17th century by Berkeley, Governor of Virginia: "Thank God there are no free schools or preaching, for learning has brought disobedience into the world, and printing has divulged them. God keep us from both."

The people as self-guardians: censorship by public opinion, not by government

Plato, who detested democracy, proposed to banish all poets; and his rulers were to serve as "guardians" of the people, telling lies for the people's good, vigorously suppressing writings these guardians thought dangerous.[60] [fol. 102] Governmental guardianship is repugnant to the basic tenet of our democracy: According to our ideals, our adult citizens are self-guardians, to act as their own fathers, [60] Plato furnished "an ideal blueprint for a totalitarian society"; Chroust, Book Rev., 1 Natural Law Forum (1956) 135, 141. See also Popper, The Open Society and Its Enemies (19); Frank, Courts on Trial (1949) 146-147, 158, 350, 360, 405-406; Frank, Fate and Freedom (1949) 119, 319, note 25, 365, note 10; Frank, If Men Were Angels (1942) 192; Fite, The Platonic Legend (1934); Catlin, The Story of the Political Philosophers (1939) 52, 58, 65-66; Kallen, Ethical Aspects of Censorship, in Protection of Public Morals Through Censorship (1953) 34, 53-54.

---

and thus become self-dependent.[61] When our governmental officials act towards our citizens on the thesis that "Papa knows best what's good for you," they enervate the spirit of the citizens: To treat grown men like infants is to make them infantile, dependent, immature.

So have sagacious men often insisted. Milton, in his Areopagitica, denounced such paternalism: "We censure them for a giddy, vicious and unguided people, in such sick and weak (a) state of faith and discretion as to be able to take down nothing but through the pipe of a licensor." "We both consider the people as our children," wrote Jefferson to Dupont de Nemours, "but you love them as infants whom you are afraid to trust without nurses, and I as adults whom I freely leave to self-government." Tocqueville sagely remarked: "No form or combination of social policy has yet been devised to make an energetic people of a community of pusillanimous and enfeebled citizens." "Man," warned Goethe, "is easily accustomed to slavery and learns quickly to be obedient when his freedom is taken from him." Said Carl Becker, "Self-government, and the spirit of freedom that sustains it, can be maintained only if the people have sufficient intelligence and honesty to maintain them with a minimum of legal compulsion. This heavy responsibility is the price of freedom." [62] The "great art," according to Milton, "lies to discern in what the law is to [fol. 103] bid restraint and punishment, and in what things persuasion only is to work." So we come back, once more, to Jefferson's advice: The only completely democratic way to control publications is through non-governmental censorship by public opinion.

5. The seeming paradox of the First Amendment.

Here we encounter an apparent paradox: The First Amendment, judicially enforced, curbs public opinion when translated into a statute which restricts freedom of expression (except that which will probably induce undesirable conduct). The paradox is unreal: The Amendment ensures that public opinion—the "common conscience of the time" —shall not commit suicide through legislation which chokes off today the free expression of minority views which may become the majority public opinion of tomorrow.

---

[61] See Frank, Self Guardianship and Democracy, 16 Am. Scholar (1947) 265.

[62] Becker, Freedom and Responsibility in the American Way of Life (1945) 42.

Private persons or groups, may validly try to influence public opinion.

The First Amendment obviously has nothing to do with the way persons or groups, not a part of government, influence public opinion as to what constitutes "decency" or "obscenity." The Catholic Church, for example, has a constitutional right to persuade or instruct its adherents not to read designated books or kinds of books.

6. The fine arts are within the First Amendment's protection.

"The framers of the First Amendment," writes Chafee, "must have had literature and art in mind, because our first national statement on the subject of 'freedom of the press,' the 1774 address of the Continental Congress to the inhabitants of Quebec, declared, 'The importance of this (freedom of the press) consists, beside the advancement of truth, science, morality and arts in general, in its diffusion [fol. 104] of liberal sentiments on the administration of government.'" [63] 165 years later, President Franklin Roosevelt said, "The arts cannot thrive except where men are free to be themselves and to be in charge of the discipline of their own energies and ardors. The conditions for democracy and for art are one and the same. What we call liberty in politics results in freedom of the arts." [64] The converse is also true.

In our industrial era when, perforce, economic pursuits must be, increasingly, governmentally regulated, it is especially important that the realm of art—the non-economic realm—should remain free, unregimented, the domain of [63] Chafee, Government and Mass Commuunication (1947) 53.

---

[64] Message at dedicating exercises of the New York Museum of Modern Art, May 8, 1939.

free enterprise, of unhampered competition at its maximum.[65] An individual's taste is his own, private, concern. De gustibus non disputandum represents a valued democratic maxim.

Milton wrote: "For though a licenser should happen to be judicious more than the ordinary, yet his very office * * * enjoins him to let pass nothing but what is vulgarly received already." He asked, "What a fine conformity would it starch us all into? * * * We may fall * * * into a gross conformity stupidly * * *" In 1859, J. S. Mill, in his essay on Liberty, maintained that conformity in taste is not a virtue but a vice. "The danger," he wrote, "is not the excess but the deficiency of personal impulses and preferences. By dint of not following their own nature (men) have no nature to follow * * * Individual spontaneity is entitled to free exercise * * * That so few men dare to be eccentric marks the chief danger of the time." Pressed by the demand for conformity, a people degenerate into "the deep slumber of a decided opinion," yield a "dull and torpid consent" to the accustomed. "Mental despotism" [fol. 105] ensues. For "whatever crushes individuality is despotism by whatever name it be called * * * It is not by wearing down into uniformity all that is individual in themselves, but by cultivating it, and calling it forth, within the limits imposed by the rights and interests of others, that human beings become a noble and beautiful object of contemplation; and as the works partake the character of those who do them, by the same process human life also becomes rich, diversified, and animating * * * In proportion to the development of his individuality, each person becomes more valuable to himself, and is therefore capable of being more valuable to others. There is a greater fullness of life about his own existence, and when there is more life in the units there is more in the mass which is composed of them."

To vest a few fallible men—prosecutors, judges, jurors—with vast powers of literary or artistic censorship, to convert them into what J. S. Mill called a "moral police," is to make them despotic arbiters of literary products. If one day they ban mediocre books as obscene, another day they may do likewise to a work of genius. Originality, not too plentiful, should be cherished, not stifled. An author's imagination may be cramped if he must write with one eye on prosecutors or juries; authors must cope with publishers who, fearful about the judgments of governmental censors, may refuse to accept the manuscripts of contemporary Shelleys or Mark Twains or Whitmans.[66]

---

[65] Frank, Fate and Freedom (1945) 194-202.

Some few men stubbornly fight for the right to write or publish or distribute books which the great majoriy at the time consider loathsome. If we jail those few, the community may appear to have suffered nothing. The appear- [fol. 106] ance is deceptive. For the conviction and punishment of these few will terrify writers who are more sensitive, less eager for a fight. What, as a result, they do not write might have been major literary contributions.[67]

Milton said that the "sense" of a great man may "to all posterity be lost for the fearfulness, or the presumptuous rashness of a perfunctory licenser."

"Suppression," Spinoza said, "is paring down the state till it is too small to harbor men of talent."

7. The motive or intention of the author, publisher or distributor cannot be the test.

Some courts once held that the motive or intention of the author, painter, publisher or distributor constituted the test of obscenity. That test, the courts have abandoned: That a man who mails a book or picture believes it entirely "pure" is no defense if the court finds it obscene.[68] U. S. v. One Book Entitled Ulysses, 72 F. 2d 705, 708 (C. A. 2). Nor, conversely, will he be criminally liable for mailing a "pure" publication—Stevenson's Child's Garden of Verse or a simple photograph of the Washington Monument—he believes obscene. Most courts now look to the "objective" intention, which can only mean the effect on those who read

---

[66] Milton remarked that "not to count him fit to print his mind without a tutor or examiner, lest he should drop * * * something of corruption, is the greatest * * * indignity to a free and knowing spirit that can be put upon him."

[67] Cf. Chaffee, The Blessings of Liberty (1956) 113.

[68] Rosen v. U. S., 161 U. S. 29, 41-42; cf. U. S. v. One Book Entitled Ulysses, 72 F. 2d 705, 708 (C. A. 2).

the book or see the picture;[69] the motive of the mailer is irrelevant because it cannot affect that effect.

8. Judge Bock's decision as to the causal relation to anti-social conduct.

In Commonwealth v. Gordon, 66 Pa. D & C 101 (1949), Judge Bok said: "A book, however sexually impure and [fol. 107] pornographic * * * cannot be a present danger unless its reader closes it, lays it aside, and transmutes its erotic allurement into overt action. That such action must inevitably follow as a direct consequence of reading the book does not bear analysis, nor is it borne out by general human experience; too much can intervene and too many diversions take place * * * The only clear and present danger * * * that will satisfy * * * the Constitution * * * is the commission or the imminence of the commission of criminal behavior resulting from the reading of a book. Publication alone can have no such automatic effect." The constitutional operation of "the statute," Judge Bok continued, thus "rests on narrow ground * * * I hold that (the statute) may constitutionally be applied * * * only where there is a reasonable and demonstrable cause to believe that a crime or misdemeanor has been committed or is about to be committed as the perceptible result of the publication and distribution of the writing in question: the opinion of anyone that a tendency thereto exists or that such a result is self-evident is insufficient and irrelevent. The causal connection between the book and the criminal behavior must appear beyond a reasonable doubt."

I confess that I incline to agree with Judge Bok's opinion. But I think it should be modified in a few respects: (a) Because of the Supreme Court's opinion in the Dennis case, 341 U. S. 494 (1951), decided since Judge Bok wrote, I would stress the element of probability in speaking of a "clear danger." (b) I think the danger need not be that of probably inducing behavior which has already been made criminal at common law or by statute, but rather of probably inducing any seriously anti-social conduct (i.e., conduct which, by statute, could validly be made a state or federal crime). (c) I think that the causal relation need not be between such anti-social conduct and a particular book [fol. 108] involved in the case on trial, but rather between such conduct and a book of the kind or type involved in the case.[70]

---

[69] U. S. v. Levine, 83 F. 2d 156 (C. A. 2); Parmelee v. U. S., 113 F. 2d 729 (App. D. C.).

9. The void-for-vagueness argument

There is another reason for doubting the constitutionality of the obscenity statute. The exquisite vagueness of the word "obscenity" is apparent from the way the judicial definition of that word has kept shifting: Once (as we saw) the courts held a work obscene if it would probably stimulate improper thoughts or desires in abnormal persons; now most courts consider only the assumed impact on the thoughts or desires of the adult "normal" or average human being. A standard so difficult for our ablest judges to interpret is hardly one which has a "well-settled" meaning, a meaning sufficient adequately to advise a man whether he is or is not committing a crime if he mails a book or pictures. See, e.g., International Harvester v. Kentucky, 234 U. S. 216; U. S. v. Cohen Grocery Co., 244 U. S. 81; Connally v. General Construction Co., 269 U. S. 885; Cline v. Frink Dairy Co., 274 U. S. 445; Champlin Refining Co. v. Commission, 286 U. S. 120; Lanzetta v. New Jersey, 306 U. S. 451; Musser v. Utah, 333 U. S. 95; Winters v. N. Y., 333 U. S. 507; cf. U. S. v. Cardiff, 343 U. S. 169.

If we accept as correct the generally current judicial standard of obscenity—the "average conscience of the time"—that standard still remains markedly uncertain as a guide to judges or jurors—and therefore to a citizen who contemplates mailing a book or picture. To be sure, we trust juries to use their common sense in applying the "reasonable man" standard in prosecutions for criminal negligence (or the like); a man has to take his chances on jury [fol. 109] verdicts in such a case, with no certainty that a [70] According to Judge Bok, an obscenity statute may be validly enforced when there is proof of a causal relation between a particular book and undesirable conduct. Almost surely, such proof cannot ever be adduced. In the instant case, the government did not attempt to prove it.

---

jury will not convict him although another jury may acquit another man on the same evidence.[71] But that standard has nothing remotely resembling the looseness of the "obscenity" standard.

There is a stronger argument against the analogy of the "reasonable man" test: Even if the obscenity standard would have sufficient definiteness were freedom of expression not involved, it would seem far too vague to justify as a basis for an exception to the First Amendment. See Stromberg v. California, 283 U. S. 359; Herndon v. Lowry, 301 U. S. 242; Winters v. New York, 333 U. S. 507; Kunz v. New York, 340 U. S. 290; Burstyn Inc. v. Wilson, 343 U. S. 495; Callings, Constitutional Uncertainty, 40 Cornell L. Q. (1955) 194, 214-218.[72]

WATERMAN, Circuit Judge, concurring:

I concur with my colleagues in affirming the judgment below. I would dispose in one sentence of the claim advanced that the applicable statute, 18 U. S. C. A. § 1461, is unconstitutional, for I believe the constitutionality of such legislation is so well settled that: "If the question is to be reopened the Supreme Court must open it. Tyomies Publishing Company v. United States, 6 Cir., 211 Fed. 385."—quoting Learned Hand, C.J., in U. S. v. Rebhuhn, 2 Cir. 1940 109 F. 2d 512 at 514, cert. denied 310 U. S. 629. I concur with Chief Judge Clark in his disposition of the remaining issues.

---

[71] Nash v. U. S., 229 U. S. 373, 377; U. S. v. Wurzbach, 280 U. S. 396, 399; U. S. v. Ragen, 314 U. S. 513, 523.

[72] In U. S. v. Rebhuhun, 109 F. 2d 512, 514 (C. A. 2), the court tersely rejected the contention that the obscenity statute is too vague, citing and relying on Rosen v. U. S., 161 U. S. 29. But the Rosen case did not deal with that subject but merely with the sufficiency of the wording of an indictment under that statute.

[fol. 110] In United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit Present: Hon. Charles E. Clark, Chief Judge, Hon. Jerome N. Frank, Hon. Sterry R. Waterman, Circuit Judges.

United States of America, Plaintiff-Appellee

v.

Samuel Roth, Defendant-Appellant

Judgment—September 18, 1956

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of record from the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, and was argued by counsel.

On consideration whereof, it is now hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment of said District Court be and it hereby is affirmed.

A. Daniel Fusaro, Clerk.

[fol. 111] [Filed endorsement omitted].

[fol. 112] Clerk's Certificate to foregoing transcript omitted in printing.

[fols. 113-114] SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, OCTOBER TEREM, 1956

No. —

SAMUEL ROTH, Petitioner

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

ORDER EXTENDING TIME TO FILE PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI—October 9, 1956

Upon consideration of the application of counsel for petitioner,

It is ordered that the time for filing petition for writ of certiorari in the above-entitled cause be, and the same is hereby, extended to and including

November 17, 1956.

John M. Harlan, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Dated this 9th day of October, 1956.

[fol. 115] SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, OCTOBER TERM, 1956

[Title omitted]

ORDER ALLOWING CERTIORARI—Filed January 14, 1957

The petition herein for a writ of certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit is granted limited to questions 1, 2, and 3 presented by the petition for the writ which read as follows:

"1. Does the federal obscenity statute (18 U.S.C. §1461, 62 Stat. 768, 69 Stat. 183) violate the freedom of speech and freedom of the press guarantees of the First Amendment?

"2. Does the federal obscenity statute (18 U.S.C. § 1461, 62 Stat. 768, 69 Stat. 183) violate the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment?

"3. Does the federal obscenity statute (18 U.S.C. §1461, 62 Stat. 768, 69 Stat. 183) violate the First, Ninth and Tenth Amendments in that it improperly invades powers reserved to the States and to the people?"

The case is consolidated with Nos. 61 and 107 and a total of three hours allowed for oral argument.

And it is further ordered that the duly certified copy of the transcript of the proceedings below which accompanied the petition shall be treated as though filed in response to such writ.

(3935-4)